Innovative leader credits his pack for award

Niagara-on-the-Lake resident Keith Simmonds was taken completely by surprise when he was announced as the recipient of the Innovative Leader Award as part of the 2022 Niagara Business Achieve-ment Awards.

Announced as the recipient of one of four bestowed awards prior to last week’s ceremony hosted by the Greater Niagara Chamber of Commerce, Simmonds was honoured as a prominent business leader who shows exemplary dedication to his community through volunteer efforts.

“I was not expecting that at all,” the vice-president and general manager of Great Wolf Lodge told The Local. “Personally, I see it as a reward for the lodge. I’m really just a small part of what we do there. Getting recognized for community things like this is pretty important to us, our pack is right into it.”

The ‘pack’ to which Simmonds refers is the staff of approximately 850 at Great Wolf Lodge, to whom he continuously gives much credit for getting behind any and all efforts the organization puts forward to contribute to the community at large.

Simmonds has been at the helm at the Niagara Falls resort since 2006. With the hotel and waterpark completely shut down for most of the pandemic, he instituted a below-cost food takeaway program for his employees, whose

Dry stone waller mystery unravelled

Menno Braam, the highly skilled person town staff mentioned as the dry stone craftsman who will build the wall at the end of Mississauga Street, says he was very surprised to hear his name in connection with a landscaping contract that is intended to begin the work this fall.

The first he learned about the project was when someone from Niagara-on-the-Lake called to ask him about taking on a completely different job, after seeing his name mentioned in The Local in connection with the gateway, he says, and sending him a copy of the article.

“I was very surprised. I knew nothing about the project.”

A discussion at a committee meeting of the whole meeting about contracting with Aldershot Landscaping, with Braam as a subcontractor to do the stone walling, referred to his participation in the project at the end of Mississauga Street.

Gerry Kowalchuk, the resident and general manager of Greater Niagara Chamber of Commerce, with Braam as a contractor, supervising the process in a competitive process is preferred, in this situation it was a benefit for the town to meet its timeline, but more important is the matter of finding someone such as Braam with the right skills to do the specialty work.

Councillors voted to approve hiring Aldershot Landscape Contractors, with Burroughs dissenting.

Braam told The Local his fall schedule is filling up quickly, and it’s a project with high visibility he would like to be part of, but as of this weekend, all he knew about the project was what he had read in The Local.

He worked with Aldershot on another job, one for the University of Toronto, and

The Virgil Business Association has supported sports and recreation in town since its very beginning, more than 50 years ago, and is continuing to do so. At their monthly meeting Monday to discuss what was an exceptionally successful Virgil Stampede, both in attendance and revenue, members of the VBA decided to give $1,000 to the Niagara-on-the-Lake Pickleball Club as a show of support.

A much-debated municipal accommodation tax approved by council just last week goes into effect Friday.

The town will begin applying a tax of two per cent as a starting point, increasing it to four per cent by 2025, for all accommodations with four or more rooms.

It was agreed the tax will not be levied on rooms that were reserved before July 1.

The goal of the tax is to fund tourism marketing programs, and “future tourism initiatives.”

Legislation governing the tax specifies the minimum tax can be 50 per cent, which it has chosen to do, as “other half going to the tourism branch of the Niagara-on-the-Lake Chamber of Commerce as the destination marketing organization (DMO), to be spent on marketing programs. The town portion will go into a special reserve for tourism-related capital projects.

Councillors were told by the town’s corporate services director Kyle Freeborn that Niagara Falls gives 95 per cent of MAT revenue to its DMO, St. Catharines is a 60/40 split, and other Ontario municipalities give 100 per cent of the accommodation tax revenue to fund tourism marketing.

The only project agreed to at this point to be funded by the town’s 50 per cent can fund, although council will make the ultimate decisions.

Freeborn said a small advisory group of tourism stakeholders was consulted to help with the terms of the proposed municipality/DMO committee would be created to include up to nine tourism stakeholders to assist town staff with “government processes,” including how the town’s portion of the money can be spent.

It has to be used to fund new tourism capital projects, and cannot replace any money already currently being spent by the town’s other committees.

Minerva Ward, president and CEO of the Chamber of Commerce and Tourism NOTL, will forge ahead with a more robust marketing plan to fund the municipal accommodation tax. (Photo supplied)

While the DMO does not have to report how it spends MAT revenue to the town, she says she expects the chamber, in the interest of transparency and accountability, will share that information.

Tourism NOTL needs to move forward, “especially in this post-COVID era where destinations are aggressively ramping up their marketing.”

Those who “kept the lights on” during COVID will have momentum on their side, “and we must ensure we service our tourism industry by implementing a marketing plan that will drive business to their doors.”

In the coming months, Tourism NOTL will define where the DMO’s portion of MAT revenues will be spent, Ward explains, with input from the business community, residents, visitors, and the Chamber’s tourism marketing advisory committee.

It will aim for sustainable tourism development that is “respectful of the physical, environmental, and psychological carrying capacity of NOTL and focus on high-yield tourism.”

As a chamber, she said, “we represent our members, but as the DMO we market all of tourism and include non-member tourism businesses in our tourism campaigns. We look forward to working with the town on the development of the tourism strategy and on the continual development of a premium NOTL tourism brand, tourism that is respectful of the community, and provides strong returns to the business community.”

Source of income was put on pause. Simmonds say 40,000 meals were distributed through that initiative.

As well, to keep up morale, there were bi-weekly to monthly online gatherings of his management team members, and all employees received weekly email newsletters that included updates, trivia, exercise suggestions and recipes.

But it was largely his efforts to offer the lodge as a distribution centre for rapid testing kits in 2021 that caught the GNCC’s attention.

In introducing Simmonds to the audience at Thursday’s event, held at the Holiday Inn and Suites in St. Catharines, Peter Van Hezewyk, of CAA Niagara, outlined the importance of Simmonds’ move.

When the Ontario government procured the new available kits, explained Van Hezewyk, it was announced they would be distributed to businesses free of charge through chamber of commerce. The idea was that employees would be able to self-test, learn if they were infected and isolated before infecting others.

But with over 13,000 employers in Niagara, and a workforce of almost 250,000, the GNCC needed a distribution partner with facilities, staff, parking, and experience processing orders and moving people quickly and efficiently.

“The GNCC went to Keith,” remembered Van Hezewyk, “and Keith simply said, ‘we’re all in.’ When the program launched in May of 2021, businesses quickly saw the culture of efficiency and service that Keith had built.”

“From the outset we supported everything the Ontario Chamber of Commerce did,” Simmonds says. “We supported their ‘This is Our Shot’ vaccination awareness campaign. We offered our facility to the health care community as well. We were pleased as punch to see people pulling up to the building to pick up the testing kits.”

Over 150,000 rapid testing kits were distributed out of Great Wolf Lodge to more than 1,000 businesses and non-profit organizations. Hundreds of asymptomatic cases were identified and isolated before they could infect others in the workplace.

“Businesses heaped praise upon the program,” noted Van Hezewyk, “for improving the mental health of their employees who felt safe returning to work.”

Van Hezewyk added that through a full year of operations, there was not a single complaint about the pickup program. “This speaks not only to Keith’s dedication to his community and willingness to serve others, but to the skill and professionalism with which he does it,” summarized Van Hezewyk, for the GNCC president and CEO.

In his acceptance speech, Simmonds said, “Great Wolf Lodge believes in our community and willing ness to serve others, not only to the health care community as well. We were pleased as punch to see people pulling up to the building to pick up the testing kits.”

In his acceptance speech, Simmonds said, “Great Wolf Lodge believes that we are incredibly fortunate to be a part of the Niagara Region whether it be as an employer, a business partner or as parents in the community. To that end we are 100 per cent committed to working together in leveraging our resources in our community beyond business operations.”

This spring Great Wolf Lodge was able to hold its annual fundraising car wash for the first time in three years. Simmonds says it raised more than $160,000 for Campfire Circle, a privately funded charity that offers opportunities for families affected by childhood cancer to attend summer camps. Previous car washes have raised more than $250,000 for Sick Kids Hospital. As well, staff members have gathered to plant trees in Heartland Forest and have participated in rides to support Niagara Health.

Though they didn’t win awards Thursday night, two NOTL organizations were also nominated for awards last week.

Spirit in Niagara (SiN) and the Merani Hotel Group. Celebrating its 60th anniversary in 2022, Shaw was lauded for its employment of more than 600 people, its leadership as a destination theatre in Ontario, and for putting 60 of Canada’s most skilled costumers to work during the pandemic to create gowns, masks and PPE for local area hospitals, shelters, hospices and clinics locally.

Art Space 106 is proud to have Canadian sculptor Peter Allan Rice, whose work is found in private collections around the world, visiting the Queen Street galleries on Canada Day to sign his book, Reflections in Glass and Stone, and demonstrate how he fashions his sculptures.

His amazing work is a combination of Muskoka rock, copper and dynamic colourful glass, which he uses to create immaculate sculpture featuring a technique he can truly call his own.

Art Space 106 started life as a gallery to feature the works of international contemporary artists, with a small group of local and native artists to compliment these works. Gradually it became evident that the gallery was best suited to specialize in Canadian art, with a focus on Ontario and local artists, and has evolved to fulfill that mandate. It features artists and artisans who amongst the best, showing their work in blown glass, raku pottery, stained glass, furniture, jewellery and hand-made art cards. Its walls are adorned with canvases representing realism as well as abstract, with mediums ranging from encaustic, cold wax and oil, monoprints, fibre, photography.

Peter is without doubt one of the best sculptors in Ontario, having been named Top Sculptor at the prestigious McMichael Gallery shows in 2017 and 2018, and in 2019, Best in Show. He spent most of his childhood years living in rural locations within or around the great Canadian Shield. This is a strong influence in his current work, which combines rocks, wire and stained glass, and visually shows the ruggedness of our Canadian remote areas.

Peter’s physical, emotional and spiritual journeys have allowed his glass to leap to new dimensions, with his unique three-dimensional technique at the cutting edge of glass work. His artisanship captures the lonesome beauty of a windswept sky, and the rugged gentleness of rocks and trees. The use of granite and quartz bases for his work anchor the swirls of glass and metal to create sculptural landscapes totally unseen before in this medium.

Peter is helping Art Space 106 fulfill its goal of bringing a selection of beautiful art to their galleries, and being part of the vibrant artistic community that abounds in our area.

Enjoy a browse through their two galleries and view an exceptional selection of art, from impressionism to abstract and realism — a well-curated showing to fill your wall and soothe your soul. Art for fun, and art to express your own sense of design.

Join them Friday, July 1 to take this opportunity to meet him, see a true master demonstrate his work, and have a copy of his book signed at Art Space 106 at 106C Queen Street, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.
Canada Day is changing, but change can be good

We may not be a patriotic lot, but Canada Day has always been pretty special in Niagara-on-the-Lake.

There is lots to do, and it's really heart-warming to see people out in mass wearing red T-shirts and waving little red flags. Or big ones.

It was a rough couple of years.

Canada Day 2020 was a time of adaptation, learning how to live in a pandemic world, a time when we began hearing everything was "unprecedented" and we had to 'pivot,' including with Canada Day celebrations.

The Friends of Fort George and Willow Cakes and Pastries tried to make us feel like we were celebrating with their take-out offerings, but it was nothing like what we're accustomed to on this day of festivities, as told to Fort George, Willow, and the Rotary Club of NOTL, which on Canada Day adopts a go big or go home attitude.

We looked forward to being able to enjoy our traditional festivities, but Canada Day 2021 was not the time for it. Not only were they cancelled again because of the pandemic, but there was a very somber, subdued feeling that followed in the tiny footsteps we were seeing as symbols of the Indigenous children believed to be buried in graves on the grounds of residential schools.

There have been more since that first Kamloops discovery, and although there has been much talk of what should be done, what needs to be done, are we really any further ahead in our quest for truth and reconciliation?

We may be more aware of our past, and taking small steps toward a more enlightened future, but we realize with the founding of the day with Indigenous peoples and what Canadian leaders have done to their little loved ones. Those attempts to acknowledge our part of our community, will have a really hard time when all around them, their neighbours are setting off fireworks.

Last year, our flags were lowered to recognize their lost children, to show we were grieving with them.

This year, those flags have been taken on a very different meaning. Whether or not to fly a Canadian flag is becoming a conversation. If there are fewer to see this Canada Day, it won't be surprising.

Our flags have come to represent something other than patriotism, or some might say, nationalism to a different cause - the freedom movement, which is basically freedom from rule by the government we demonstratively elected. Our flag is no longer a symbol of pride in our country, love for around our country, it is a symbol of protest against our country.

But in Canada, we also have the freedom to speak about what we don't love, and to call for change.

What will next year bring?
A local farmer’s dream becomes a reality

Maria H. Klassen
Special to The Local

Growing up on a tender fruit farm, a young Arnie Lepp saw good fruit thrown away every day, going to waste. Peaches, nectarines, apricots, pears, yellow and blue plums and cherries are called tender fruit as they bruise easily. Markets for the fruit, such as stores, buy only perfect fruit as that is what the consumer wants to buy. And so, when the fruit is sorted and packed in the packing barn, there is lots of imperfect fruit that can’t be sold, about 10 per cent, or 3050 tonnes a year of crops becomes waste. This amount of fruit waste had been on Lepp’s mind for a long time. “It has bothered me my whole life throwing all that good fruit away,” he says.

That was the motivation behind his building Spirit in Niagara Small Batch Distillers. Most distilleries make potato or grain based spirits. Lepp wanted to use this excess fruit.

Lepp’s father and grandfather were tender fruit farmers, coming to Niagara in the early 1940s. In this Mennonite home he was taught not to waste anything, having two older brothers put that theory into practice with hand-me-downs. He learned the value of things, how so many items can be repurposed.

At 21 years of age, Lepp bought his first five acres. He spent the next decade learning the cabinet-making trade, returning to full-time farming in his early 30s, when he bought more orchards. Expansion included buying Niagara Growers in 1988, a company where he bought his supplies, such as fertilizers for the orchards, and containers for the fruit.

The fruit that is not sold is often the sweetest fruit with the most juice. It is difficult to deal with this unused fruit as it cannot be put back into the orchards. The ripe fruit releases chemicals that will rot the next year’s crop if it is left in the orchards. It is often dumped into open spaces, where it should not be. Tender fruit has always been a challenging crop to grow and market as retail stores can buy fruit at a lower cost from the south.

In 2017 Lepp started designing and planning Spirit in Niagara. He continued with his plans even during the pandemic, starting the building in 2020, opening the distillery and lounge/patio the next year. He has ample access to bruised and over-ripened fruit through his own orchards and those of other local farms. The distillery building is on his farm, on the property where he dismantled an old barn built 150 years ago. All the material from this barn was saved, the wood pressure washed, and repurposed for the new building.

This building houses the distillery, lounge and tasting bar. A press and several fermentation tanks are located in the packing area of the large open warehouse space. When the fermentation process is complete, the liquid mash goes into one of three stills, each doing a different job. The finishing process includes adding flavours to enhance the various products, choosing from a variety of 15 different herbs, two of them being juniper and coriander. A ton of fruit waste produces 700 litres of juice, which produces 70 litres of alcohol.

The ingredients for the menu selections in the lounge are grown and produced locally from the fruits and vegetables, to the cheeses and meats, sodas and honey. Lepp used his cabinet-making skills to craft the circular tasting bar, and the inside décor, incorporating the 150 year old beams.

What Lepp says he has learned in this pandemic is the importance of small and local businesses. His dream of helping local farms reduce the amount of fruit that is wasted annually, by converting waste into an incredible taste, is now a reality. Using local produce, working within the region, cutting transportation costs, benefit the community, local businesses and the environment.

The Local

After two seasons of following a strictly online process, the Garden of the Week contest is back in its original format.

Members of the Niagara-on-the-Lake Horticultural Society will be judging those nominated, front gardens only, says contest coordinator Susan Dodd, and then returning to take photographs of the weekly winners. The horticultural society is partnering with the town’s Communities in Bloom committee, says Dodd, and nominations — from owners who wish to nominate their garden, or others who admire one they’ve passed by, as long as they know the address — can be submitted on the town’s website.

The deadline for each week’s nominations is Monday evening. Three judges will do their rounds Wednesday mornings, beginning July 6, and continuing for nine weeks, with the winning garden featured in the following edition of The Local. Horticultural society member Marla Percy will pick one interesting and beautiful plant from each chosen garden, and write about it for The Local, so readers, including gardeners who admire the contest winners, can learn something about what makes it a winner.

Each of the nine contest winners will receive a prize of Miracle-Gro products, a bottle of wine from Konzelman Estate Winery and a gift certificate from Sunset Grill on Queen Street.

“This is the Year of the Garden,” says Dodd, “and showcasing front gardens of residents through Garden of the Week is just one of the initiatives of the town to celebrate it.”

Learn about community centre activities

Local Staff

Learn about all the recreational activities and programs the town has to offer for all ages, at a community centre open house Thursday.

Tomorrow, June 30, from 11:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m., the Anderson Lane community centre is holding an event for town residents to explore activities and programs the town has to offer, "find what interests you, your friends, and your family," says Lord Mayor Betty Diseiro. "Niagara-on-the-Lake has such a vibrant, active community who loves to get involved in all different kinds of programming. Come out and find what interests you, your friends, and your family."

The event is thanks to a ParticipACTION grant to promote healthy living and physical fitness.

There will be vendor booths promoting programs and activities, a bounce castle for children, onsite instructors giving free lawn bowling lessons, door prizes, community goodie bags for the first 50 guests, free use of the community centre fitness gym all day, and special programming at the library.

“This event is a wonderful way to engage residents in learning more about the recreational activities and programs the town has to offer,” says Lord Mayor Betty Diseiro. “Niagara-on-the-Lake has such a vibrant, active community who loves to get involved in all different kinds of programming. Come out and find what interests you, your friends, and your family.”

The event is thanks to a ParticipACTION grant to promote healthy living and physical fitness.

Strawberries, socializing both a delight for seniors

Mike Balsom
The Local

Judging by the chatter and laughter heard at the community centre Monday afternoon, the return of the Town of Niagara-on-the-Lake’s annual Strawberry Social for seniors was a huge success. About 120 residents sat down in the auditorium to enjoy a lunch of sandwiches and salads provided by PigOut Catering, followed by ice cream and fresh strawberries from Seaway Farms. Another 280 take-out boxes, with butter tarts replacing the ice cream, were picked up at the side door as well. More than half of those went to residents in the town’s long-term care homes.

When The Local arrived, the space was about three-quarters full. Local seniors sat at tables socializing and for many of them it was the first time in over two years.

“It was great to come out and meet some new people,” Brigitte Bassie said. “There were so many smiling faces. It’s such a great event to bring the community together. I can’t wait to see how this evolves over the years as we get back to normal.”

The Strawberry Social is a long-standing tradition. Each June in NOTL, the town providing lunch at no charge, always finishing with fresh strawberries during Senior’s Month. Town staff and council members come out to serve the meal and chat.

After being cancelled in 2020, it returned last year as a pick-up only event.

Town councillor Wendy Cheropita, who volunteered to help out at the event, was all smiles as she circulated amongst the crowd.

“It’s sort of like Niagara-on-the-Lake is coming to life again,” raved Cheropita. “Everybody that walked in the door was so happy to socialize and to be amongst friends. People were meeting new friends and catching up with people they haven’t seen in two and a half years. It was beautiful.”

Marah Minor, the town’s community engagement and communications coordinator, was overjoyed with how the social turned out.

“It takes a lot of people to make this come to life,” she said. “To our entire communications team, as well as our parks and recreation team. It’s our first year doing both pick-up and in-person, our first trial with that format. We all came together to do it and it went really smoothly.”

Like Cheropita, Minor said the ability to gather together in such a setting made the day a huge success.

Chain of communication didn’t reach to Braam says it went very well, and he’d be happy to work with them again.

But as for the NOTL project, “I had no idea it was happening. I wasn’t contacted by anyone.”

He called the mystery of how the mix-up occurred an “issue of miscommunication,” and a “misunderstanding — it was implied that I was involved,” he said, adding he would be happy to be part of the project, if his schedule permits and the details can be worked out.

Braam and McLelland are friends who have worked together on different projects locally. McLelland explains Braam helped on an important Willowbank project, building the walls for the Blacksmith’s Shop on the property. The work took place over a period of years, as part of Stone Festivals held locally. McLelland also donates his time, including working on two projects that were fundraisers for Red Roof Retreat, alongside Menno Braam. Participants worked on a dry stone wall to replace fencing, with McLelland and Braam overseeing the project and providing the instruction.

He was surprised when Braam contacted him to tell him he’d been mentioned in connection with the gateway project.

McLelland says he “was working on the gateway project for ages,” spending a significant amount of time meeting with Turcotte and town staff on the design of the dry stone wall, providing drawings and estimates, “hours and hours going over details,” and then more drawings as the design changed.

He described the project as important, saying “I was working on the gateway project for ages,” spending a significant amount of time meeting with Turcotte and town staff on the design of the dry stone wall, providing drawings and estimates, “hours and hours going over details,” and then more drawings as the design changed.

When the gateway project didn’t work out for him, it left a hole in his schedule, but that was quickly filled, fortunately for the sake of his employees, he said. Town staff told The Local they would have a response that might clear up the mystery, but not in time for publication.

Kowalchuk, however, did respond. Seferian Design Group, the landscape architect that worked on the design, had direct contact with the general contractor, Aldershot Landscaping, he explained. Seferian provided details of the pricing, commencement and completion dates to him and town staff. “Thus, neither town staff or myself spoke to Aldershot.”

Since the dry stone wall is an important feature, “Aldershot also provided details of who the stone mason would be, namely, Menno Braam, including his background, experience, photos of similar projects, etc. Seferian was our representative in these discussions, which again, was communicated to myself and town staff.”

Kowalchuk says he does not believe there was a misunderstanding.

The general contractor has the responsibility for the whole job, including all sub-trades. Braam is one of several sub-trades, he explained. “To my knowledge, Seferian spoke to the general contractor, not the sub-trades.”

Finally, he added “Aldershot Landscaping has had experience with Menno Braam on other significant projects, and they are familiar with his work and likely his pricing.”

Aldershot owner Bill DeLuca said he was excited about the project, but as he is semi-retired from the family business, he didn’t know the details.

He said he would look into it, but didn’t get back to The Local by press time.

Turcotte originally wanted him to be the general contractor, and McLelland says he told him that’s not what he does, or his area of expertise, but that he would do the dry stone walling.

When it came time to sign the contract, however, the lack of a deposit was the deal-breaker. “I’ve never done a project, ever, without a deposit.” He would be bringing three men with him to work in NOTL, it would require equipment, and he couldn’t agree to the 30-day payment terms Turcotte was offering.

When the gateway project didn’t work out for him, it left a hole in his schedule, but that was quickly filled, fortunately for the sake of his employees, he said. Town staff told The Local they would have a response that might clear up the mystery, but not in time for publication.

Soccer camp is back in Virgil this July

The NOTL Soccer Club’s summer camp is returning July 25 to 29. Hamilton Soccer Hall of Fame member John DiPasquale is back running the camp for two age groups: U6 to U9 in the morning (9-11:30); U10 and up in the afternoon (12-2:30).

Port Colborne native DiPasquale captained the U16 Ontario Boys team to a National Championship and repeated that feat in 1983 at the U18 level. He later represented Canada as a member of the U19 and U20 National teams. The retired high school teacher turned pro with the Hamilton Steelers in 1986, where he ran youth summer camps. He later coached at Niagara University and for the Hamilton Thunder of the CPSL.

DiPasquale says the camp will cover skill techniques such as ball mastery, passing, receiving techniques and dribbling. Agility and footwork will be incorporated through all of this on a daily basis. Each thematic skill set will be followed by an opportunity to “play.” The emphasis is to have everyone jump into attack and make a habit of flipping to defending mode whenever there is a turnover. The camp is great for both house league and travel team players.

Cost for either half-day session is $100. Visit notlsoccer.ca for information and to register.

The Niagara-on-the-Lake Museum is once again hosting two of NOTLs much loved community events this summer. On the annual Civic Holiday, Monday August 1, The Past is Present Heritage Festival will be held on the grounds of the Museum at 43 Castlereagh Street. And on Saturday September 10, the Commons in Niagara-on-the-Lake will resonate to the sound of thundering horses’ hooves at the spectacular Niagara Polo event. Both events honour tradition, history, and community engagement. The Past is Present Heritage Festival will feature a variety of experiences that range from live music and historic demonstrations to bake sales, pig roasts, and treasure hunts. The event is free for all and runs from 11 am to 3 pm on August 1st.

The Niagara Polo event is steeped in history, and well known for its brilliance in sportsmanship, dramatic matches, and joyful spectators – not to mention many a designer hat or two. Generously sponsored by Nancy Bailey of Engel & Volkers Oakville, the NOTL Museum hosts the Toronto Polo Club on the historic beautiful community greenspaces in Niagara-on-the-Lake. The event is free for all and runs from 11 am to 3 pm on August 1st.

And if you aren’t in town for these great events, you can always enjoy the Museum’s exhibitions, which highlight the important history of our community. The plan addresses matters such as protection of the natural environment, agriculture, source water, aggregates and petroleum, and cultural heritage and archaeology. It establishes a regional urban structure to strategically manage growth, and facilitates intensification, attainable and affordable housing, and identification of employment areas for protection. Tools such as district and secondary planning, subwatershed planning and urban design, along with supporting infrastructure and transportation systems, are important to growing sustainably and achieving complete and vibrant communities.

Marynissen Estates supports search and rescue

Local air search and rescue volunteers Randy Klaassen, shown looking out the window of a Hercules out of Trenton, and Stewart Harris joined members of the Joint Rescue Coordination Centre, based in Trenton, in the Hercules aircraft early in the morning of Friday, June 17. They were asked to be spotters in the search for a boater who had gone out fishing the morning before, and hadn’t returned home. The OPP, NRP and Canadian Coast Guard were also involved in the search, along with three Niagara volunteers who were Durnova trained to search with a drone. CBC reported the 74-year-old man’s body was found in Lake Erie June 22.

Randy Klaassen Special to the Local

Volunteers of the local Civil Air Search And Rescue Association recently held their annual membership meeting, at which those in key leadership roles were recognized for their extra contributions to the organization.

On behalf of Marynissen Estates, retail manager Julie Enns presented some wine donations to the community volunteers in appreciation for their dedication to saving lives.

During the online meeting Alex Cuberovic, CASARA Niagara president, acknowledged those who contribute to the charity’s operations, “behind the scenes.”

“Without those who provide leadership to our 30 volunteers, we would not be able to maintain a 24/7/365 readiness for call outs,” he said.

“Those roles are everything from bookkeeping to washroom cleaning, from instructors to those who maintain vehicles,” Cuberovic told those attending the meeting virtually.

CASARA Niagara operates from Niagara District Airport, and is assigned to searches by Joint Rescue Coordination Centre (JRCC) Trenton. While aviation-focused, in the last while most of the call-outs for have been to search for people missing on Ontario lakes. In addition to conducting searches with their own aircraft and vehicles, CASARA volunteers are also called upon to support crews of 424 Transport and Rescue Squadron (Trenton), which is why any NOTIFY residents may occasionally see the large dark green Hercules aircraft at Niagara District Airport.

Last year members of CASARA Niagara volunteered more than 5,000 hours for training and call-outs. As a registered charity, CASARA Niagara depends on community donations for their base operations. For more information visit http://casarniagara.ca.

PUBLIC NOTICE

Notice of Study Completion Municipal Class Environmental Assessment York Road and Four Mile Creek Road Intersection Improvements, St. Davids, Ontario

The intersection of York Road (Regional Road 81) and Four Mile Creek Road (Regional Road 100) is located in the heart of the community of St. Davids in the Town of Niagara-on-the-Lake. The intersection is currently controlled by an all-way stop, and during peak periods motorists experience delays. The skewed angle of the intersection also creates vehicle safety issues, while there is an opportunity to improve pedestrian and bicycle facilities for the intersection and vicinity.

Niagara Region, through their consultant CIMA+, has completed a Municipal Class Environmental Assessment Study for the subject intersection in accordance with the planning process for Schedule ‘C’ projects, as outlined in the Municipal Engineers Association Municipal Class Environmental Assessment document (2000), as amended in 2007, 2011, and 2015, as approved under the Ontario Environmental Assessment Act.

An Environmental Study Report has been prepared to document the planning and decision-making process for the study. By this notice, the Environmental Study Report is being placed on the public record for a 45-calendar day public review from and including June 30, 2022 to August 15, 2022 on the project website: niagararegion.ca/projects/regional-road/100/default.aspx.

Interested persons may provide written comments to the project contacts within the 45-calendar day review period. All comments and concerns should be sent directly to the Niagara Region project manager and consultant project manager by August 15, 2022.

Niagara Region unveils Pride crosswalk

Penny Coles
The Local

As Pride Month wraps up, it does so with the addition of a Pride crosswalk installed by the Niagara Region.

And while the rainbow crosswalk covers a wide range of diverse groups, including the 2SLGBTQQIA+ community in Niagara and beyond, Enzo De Divitiis, chair of Pride Niagara, stressed at the unveiling the need for “supporting everyone, and being an ally to everyone. You can’t support this group, and not that group, or support them this month, but not next month,” he said.

There was much joking about the crosswalk being in Thorold — Thorold Mayor Terry Ugulini spoke of how proud he was to have it in his municipality, while Regional Chair Jim Bradley emphasized it’s in Niagara Region. However it connects to St. Catharines, and is intended to be a symbol of welcoming and inclusivity across the region, Bradley said.

“We are proud of this initiative and want to thank all the parties involved in making this happen,” said Ugulini. “The City of Thorold is committed to supporting its 2SLGBTQQIA+ community and is dedicated to being a responsive city that respects the rights, differences, and dignity of all its people. This new crosswalk shows our commitment to foster a community where every person feels like they belong,” he said.

It was completed last Tuesday, and officially recognized Friday, as traffic passed by and over it at the intersection of Sir Isaac Brock Way, and the Schmon Parkway. It’s a busy and highly visible location, much travelled by regional staff, and Brock staff and students, with regional buildings on one side of the intersection, Brock University buildings on the other, and student residences on both sides, as well as a Tim Hortons and McDonald’s side by side.

The design of the Pride crosswalk was developed by the Brock University Human Rights and Equity office, in collaboration with the local 2SLGBTQQIA+ communities, “showing our commitment to diversity and inclusion in Niagara,” Bradley told a small crowd gathered for the event.

“Throughout the month of June and beyond, Niagara will continue to promote, educate and drive awareness to benefit local 2SLGBTQQIA+ communities within Niagara,” he said. “Our goal is to foster a community where every person feels they belong.”

The all-inclusive colours of the crosswalk, intended to represent the safety and support of all the communities who walk on it, include black and brown stripes as well as light blue, pink, and white. “The black and brown represent 2SLGBTQQIA+ community members who are racialized, and have historically and continue to experience marginalization within our communities; the light blue, pink, and white represent transgender community members; finally, the last purple chevron intersects with the white as a reminder of the two-row wampum agreement. These colours represent the Indigenous land we walk on and our responsibility to the land and to each other,” a regional press release explained.

“We will continue to promote, educate and drive awareness of gender and sexually diverse individuals in our community as part of our efforts to build the most inclusive community possible,” said Bradley. In his 12 years with Pride Niagara, all volunteer based, De Divitiis said it’s been an effort over the years just to get municipalities to raise rainbow flags during Pride Month. There was a time if Pride Niagara wanted to attract vendors at an event, they had to pick odd days to hold the event, he said, and pay the vendors to come. “Things have drastically changed. We have these positive spaces, safe places,” but, he explained, “nobody else can identify these spaces. You have to know what a safe space is for yourself.”

The crosswalk is a reminder of support, he said, a beacon to show everyone is supported and celebrated. “I can’t wait to see every municipality follow suit.”

Representing the Senior Pride Niagara Network, for those 55 and over, Nancy Radclyffe said she feels her group has strong support from “a great group of allies.” But it’s taken a while to get there, she added. “For 50 years we’ve been fighting this battle. We’re talking about the same things now we’ve been talking about for 50 years.”

She’s expanding the battle now to reach more people who deal with seniors, including care-givers and staff in long-term care homes.

About the crosswalk, she said, “you don’t know how much this means, how it makes us stand up stronger and say yes, this is about us. Today we celebrate our successes. Today we celebrate how far we’ve come.”

Sabrina Constance-Hill, chair of the Niagara Region Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion Advisory Committee, spoke of her identity struggles as a teenager, being dismissed, told she was confused, she was wrong, “and finding few allies, and fewer places to turn to.” Today, there are places in the community where support exists, she said, referring to the crosswalk “as a symbol of acceptance, pride, hope and opportunity.”

Ken Chan, vice-president of administration at Brock University, comes from a country where it’s still illegal to be in a same-sex relationship, and told those gathered at the Pride crosswalk that he came out despite the law. He’s proud to be at Brock University, “where we’re supported in many ways,” he said, and in the Niagara Region, “where everyone is welcome.”

The crosswalk, he said, “sends a very strong message that you are safe here.”
The things we’ve handed down – honouring Harvill Maye

Jane Andres Special to The Local

If you were passing down a rural stretch of road on a recent Saturday night you may have noticed the tantalizing aroma of rich Caribbean spices drifting towards the roadside. You may have slowed down as you noticed the glowing of dozens of candles lining the driveway and flickering lights lining the porch of one of several bunkhouses. You would have heard the distinct reggae beat of lively Jamaican gospel, full of hope and grace. You may have wondered what kind of occasion could draw almost 200 well-wishers to this little duster of bunkhouses amidst the orchards.

The occasion was a candlelight service honouring Harvill Maye, a beloved co-worker who passed away suddenly of natural causes on June 10.

In Jamaica the candlelight service would have normally marked the beginning of a series of nine-night events leading up to the funeral. Traditions that help cope with grief and loss have to be adapted when so far away from loved ones. One essential tradition that is never compromised though is the coming together to cook and share the familiar tastes of home.

Harvill’s good friend Stanford Williams was adding the final ingredients to a gigantic pot of mannish wat (goat soup), where it was simmering on the stove. A candlelight gathering is not complete without this staple to bring comfort to well-wishers.

Rohan Thompson had started marinating the jerk chicken two days earlier and was carefully tending to the chicken legs as they sizzled on the barbecue, later to top off the plates of rice and peas. Together coworkers, friends, and neighbours mingled, reminiscing about their late friend and sharing his jokes and stories as they knew he would want them to.

On Sunday evening the next day, Caribbean Workers Outreach Project (CWOP) hosted a combination Father’s Day church service and memorial for Harvill. The theme was “The Things We’ve Handled Down.”

Harvill’s employer, Scott MacSween, shared the following story:

“Harvill started travelling to Canada in 2002 where he worked on an apple farm just outside of Simcoe, up until 2016, at which point the apple farm sold and I was lucky enough to be able to get him transferred to our farm. With all of Harvill’s expertise with apples, he picked up all the tasks related to pruning, thinning, and harvesting very quickly. Where Harvill really left his mark in farming, though, was when we put him in charge of irrigating all the farms along with his close friend Russell and Melardon. They did an outstanding job. It’s going to be very hard to replace Harvill.”

“Harvill was a very-well respected man on our farms, not only to me, my son, and my wife, but to all of his coworkers. This was so profoundly illustrated when I suggested to the men that we should try and raise money for his family. I am proud to say that everyone gave generously. “So Harvill, our thoughts are with you and your family. Your hard work, dedication, and friendship will never be forgotten. We are all heartbroken and we will miss you dearly. May you rest in peace.”

The memorial service also featured audio messages from Harvill’s wife, Semonea, and his daughter, Oneila, which accompanied a slideshow of family photos and touched everyone’s hearts deeply.

Semonea shared, “Harvill was a very hard-working man, very loving and kind. He’s the one who never wants anyone to feel left behind. He’s the one who is always pushing you to do better, pushing you to be the best you can be. He’s the one that would be encouraging [his coworkers] to save money, all his friends can attest to that.

“I’m just glad that he touched everyone’s heart in so many ways. He made an impact on everyone that he came across. This is really hard for everybody, really hard. He was a family man, a man of principles. He was a principle man and he did not stand for foolishness. I want to thank everyone for your support and outpouring of love. Thank you, thank you all. He will be missed. Not just by his family members, not by just me, but just by his children, but by people worldwide. He will be well missed…”

To all his friends in the fields just think of the memories and remember him in a good way – all the jokes that he used to share… To his coworkers I just want to thank you. Thank you, thank you for caring and the support you have shown.”

Semonea went on to express how meaningful it was to them as a family that many of the friendships on the farm carried on into their lives back home in Jamaica.

The culture of care and respect at MacSween farms is beneficial not only to the men living and working on the farm eight months of the year. As Semonea would agree, this care and respect has a direct impact on the families back in Jamaica as well, grateful to know that their fathers, husbands, and sons receive the dignity they deserve.

Leong Harvill was no doubt one of their hardest experiences collectively at MacSween Farms, but the ripple of his influence will continue to inspire others.

Words of wisdom penned by a farmer, Wendell Berry, provide reassurance: “Whatever happens those who have learned to love one another have made their way to the last ing bird and will not leave, whatever happens.”

May the memory of Harvill Maye, a cherished member of our community, be as robust and comforting as the special soup Stanford Williams so lovingly prepared.

Notice of Study Completion Transportation Master Plan – Communities on the Move

In March 2020, the Town of Niagara-on-the-Lake initiated a Transportation Master Plan (TMP) study. A Transportation Master Plan (TMP) is intended to serve as a long-range strategic plan for Niagara-on-the-Lake to identify transportation infrastructure requirements that address existing challenges and support growth, along with policies to guide transportation and land use decisions.

The study identified the Town’s transportation needs and opportunities through the year 2031 and recommended multi-modal operational, design, and transportation policies for the Town. Recommendations from the Transportation Master Plan will enhance connectivity between transportation modes to move people sustainably, efficiently, and safely while reducing reliance upon any single mode of transportation.

Prior to the finalization of the TMP and approval by Town Council, members of the public are invited to contribute feedback.

The Process

The Niagara-on-the-Lake TMP study was undertaken in accordance with the Master Planning process of the Municipal Class Environmental Assessment (Municipal Engineers Association, 2000 as amended) (Class EA), which is an approved process under Ontario’s Environmental Assessment Act. The EA process includes a public engagement and consultation. The TMP provides the framework for future projects that may require further detailed studies under the Municipal Class EA.

To learn more about the process undertaken, please visit https://www.jointheconversationnotl.org/TransportationMasterPlan.

Notice of Review Period

A draft TMP Report, which outlines the study’s outcome, has been prepared and is now ready for public review and consultation. This notice announces the start of the 30-day calendar review period for the TMP in accordance with the requirements of the EA process.

Public consultation is a key component of this process, and the Town wants to hear from you. The draft TMP Report will be available for review from June 30 to August 1, 2022, online at https://www.jointheconversationnotl.org/TransportationMasterPlan.

Members of the public are invited to review the Report and provide comments by August 1, 2022, on the Join the Conversation link noted above. Comments received help to inform and determine the final stages of the project and will become part of the public record of the study, except for personal information.

In August 2022, Council, having not yet approved or endorsed the Report, will be presented with the final draft Report and a summary of the comments received during the 30-day review period.

Performing Arts Centre announces exciting new season

Mike Balsom
The Local

The FirstOntario Performing Arts Centre in St. Catharines recently announced its 2022-2023 season, with a lineup of shows from September through to next summer featuring an assortment of music, dance, theatre, opera, comedy and cultural experiences that are sure to appeal to just about everyone.

“That’s sort of the key” director of programming and marketing Sara Palmieri said in a recent interview. “Part of being a presenter is curating, which makes us a bit different from a promoter or a road house. It’s important to us to put something together that represents the world and the times that we live in.”

Palmieri admitted that it felt a bit surreal to be planning a season when they were still forming arts stage to present something. “It felt a bit surreal to be planning what they’ve been working on since before March, 2020. No one could have predicted the times that we live in. ”

The season kicks off with the sixth annual Celebration of Nations gathering of Indigenous performers that blend classical music and contemporary pop. The performance will be preceded by a community meal.

Performances during the celebration of nations will showcase international and local Indigenous artists who will present the Wailers, “a relieved and humour on Dec. 29, while the Girls Night Out Sketch Comedy Troupe celebrates International Women’s Day on March 8.

Professional choral group dedicated to Afrocentric music of all styles. Comedian Shaun Majumder, who spent 17 seasons on CBC’s This Hour Has 22 Minutes, brings his act to downtown St. Catharines on Dec. 1.

The season also features international and local acts such as Cirque Kalabunte, Canada’s first professional choral group dedicated to Afrocentric music of all styles. Comedian Shaun Majumder, who spent 17 seasons on CBC’s This Hour Has 22 Minutes, brings his act to downtown St. Catharines on Dec. 1.

There’s much more in the lineup, including a full season of movies at the Film House, Bravo Niagara! Festival’s December presentation of the Count Basie Orchestra, a tribute to the late Gord Downie on the fifth anniversary of his death in October, and acrobatic performances from Cirque Kalabunte and Femmes Du Feu.

Palmieri urges fans of the arts to consider becoming a PAC member for $125 plus HST. Members are able to order tickets before the general public, save up to 25 per cent off regular ticket prices, can bring friends for free to select events, and also receive invitations to special events.

“Tickets went on sale to the general public this Tuesday. For the full 2022/2023 lineup, visit firstontariopac.ca.”

Festival organizers glad to be back with community event

Popular Cherry Festival returns with favourites

Penny Coles
The Local

For more than 30 years the St. Mark’s Church Cherry Festivals has been an annual tradition that includes the highlight of the event — fresh-baked cherry pies, which quickly sell out.

After a two-year absence, the festival returns this year, along with the delicious pies and jams, and the favourite activities which make the event so popular with locals and out-of-town visitors, says Andrea Douglas, one of the organizers.

This year, there will be a slight difference to the pie sale — the pies are made ahead of time with local cherries that have been purchased in advance and frozen.

The pies, once assembled, are frozen then baked in time for festival day. For the July 9 event, only about half the pies will be baked, the other half sold frozen, unbaked, providing another option for those who choose to bake it, ready to be enjoyed.

Although there will be hundreds of pies for sale, there won’t be the usual number, with the time crunch involving having to delay a decision that there could even be a festival, rather than the planning that typically begins as soon as the previous year’s festival is over.

So come early if you want a pie, says Douglas — there is no doubt they will sell out rapidly as they always do, this year likely quicker than usual.

The one event that will not be available this year is the silent auction — it takes a full year to organize, so when the decision was made that the festival could go ahead, there just wasn’t enough time.

“Typically, we begin talking in January, February, about what the festival is going to look like. This year was a little different. We’re just really happy it’s going ahead, and the excitement is building, for sure,” says Douglas.

Other traditional favourites will be back, including a barbecue with pulled barbecued sandwiches for breakfast when the festival opens at 9 a.m., coffee and muffins will be served, and a little later, in time for lunch, hot dogs, hamburgers and sausages will be added to the list.

Cherry pie by the slice and the baked goods table, and there will be cherry jam, of course, cherry juice, pea soup, pickled beets, cranberry sauce, as well as beef cottage pie and lasagna, all made by a team of volunteers working away in the church hall kitchen, led by Gary Burnoughs, the cottage pie and lasagna fruoner.

The much-loved gently-used clothing, treasures and book sales will return, and there will be a children’s area, as always, Douglas says, with live music in the church at 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. with Jim Bourne, the music director and organist at St. Mark’s, providing entertainment. The Fort George Fife and Drum Corps will be performing at noon. There will also be two heritage interpreters on site, two young men “passionate about history,” giving tours of the church and talking about its significant history in the community, thanks to a government summer jobs grant.

New at the festival will be the NOTL Museums Tiny Museum, which is able to travel into the community and share stories of local history. It was built and ready to go just as the pandemic hit, so this will be the first year of its use, attending local events with museum exhibits. There are several different exhibits tailored to the small space, which be rotated as it will travels around NOTL this summer. The display at the Cherry Festival will be People of Niagara, and will tell the stories of the early settlers of Niagara, including the Loyalists, and the Black and 19th-century communities.

While the festival is a fundraiser, with the money raised going to church operations, it is always more about giving back to the community, and this year that seems more important than ever, says Douglas.

While it’s difficult to know what to expect in the way of a turnout, volunteers are hoping for a good crowd.

In past years, attendance has easily been more than 2,000, although it’s difficult to keep track with people coming and going throughout the day, says Douglas.

There are fewer American visitors coming to town, though, she adds, and they have always loved the Cherry Festival, so their absence will likely make a difference.

“However, it feels so good to have things starting up again. I’ve missed them myself, and I know others have as well,” she says, as she looks forward to attending Canada Day celebrations in town as well, and is feeling more excited, and even privileged, as the Cherry Festival gets closer, to be planning it once again for the community after three years since the last one.

“We are all excited — this is an important event for the parish, but also for the community. We love interacting with the community, seeing everyone having fun together, looking at the clothing, picking up their pies. This is really about community.”

The event runs from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday; July 9, at St. Mark’s Anglican Church on Byron Street.

Jazz ‘odd choice’ for pianist with Indigenous heritage

‘Jazz and swing just spoke to me,’ says Sean Stanley

Mike Balsom
The Local

Before turning the focus to their upcoming summer festival, the TD Niagara Jazz Festival closes the book on their Twilight Jazz and Blues series on July 4 with a performance by the Sean Stanley Quartet at Spirit in Niagara (SiN) Distillery.

The 1920s-themed Lakeshore Road business is the perfect setting for the group, as bandleader and pianist Stanley is a huge admirer of the music of Jelly Roll Morton and Duke Ellington, two jazz legends who reigned supreme during that decade.

Stanley admits his original compositions are heavily influenced by Ellington, and are often written with a big band in mind, though he rarely has the chance to perform with bands larger than his quartet or trio. For his Niagara-on-the-Lake performance, he promises to play a few of those originals, as well as the music of Ray Charles, Lester Young and Erroll Garner.

In the Toronto music world, Stanley is not your typical pianist. He is one of very few Toronto jazz musicians with an Indigenous background (Pottawatomi/Ojibwe and Acadian) and background (Pottawatomi/Ojibwe and Acadian) and comes from a much less privileged upbringing than the majority of his contemporaries.

In addition, he overcame homelessness in his teens and转到 the shelter system in during that decade.

The Sean Stanley Quartet will be playing at the Spirit in Niagara Distillery July 4, a perfect, 1920s-themed location for the quartet’s style of jazz. (Photo supplied)

Sheer genius

Fred Curtis was an old-school barber and quite a dapper fellow, waxing his moustache to a point, recalls Robin Hoven, who grew up in town and recently came across this photograph. Curtis was actually a town undertaker before becoming a barber, he says. This photo made the Niagara Advance back in 64 or 65 when Howe, now 11 or 12 at the time, happened to be in the barbershop for what he remembers being “a really long haircut.” Curtis was showing him one of his antique shaving mugs, he says.

“We're native people, but we live in the city,” Stanley says of him and his immediate family. “We didn’t grow up learning our traditional dance and music. Living in the city we’re not able to resist the strength of integration with other cultures around the world.”

When the Ray Charles biopic (Ray, in 2004) came out he found the inspiration he was looking for. From there, his musical palette expanded as friends led him to learn more about jazz through exposing him to the music of Louis Armstrong and his Hot Fives and Hot Sevens ensembles.

“When I heard jazz and swinging for the first time, it just spoke to me,” Stanley says on the street by his Scarborough home. “My grandfather on my Dad’s side was a banjo player, a bluegrass musician. I heard a lot of the same rhythms in jazz.”

Stanley now 35 years old, speaks of the time he was just 15, and he, his mother and sister were forced to turn to the shelter system in Toronto. The family’s struggle to earn money. So he’s excited to be at busking on the streets as much to keep up his chops as to earn a bit of money. So he’s excited to be playing the final event of the Monday night TD Niagara Jazz Festival series.

"Judit (Dunn, the festival's executive director and co-creator) has taken an interest in me," he says. "I appreciate that she understands that my story is a lot different than others." For July 4, Sean’s quartet will be rounded out by bassist Chris Adriana, Andrew McCarthy on drums and Juno award winner Kyle Tar-Doster on tenor sax. The show begins at 6 p.m., with doors opening an hour earlier. Ticket prices range from $19 to $39 with both theatre-style and table seating options.

As well, the lineup for the Summer Jazz Festival has been announced. It kicks off on July 20 with a performance by Dizzy and Fay (Mark Lalama and Amanda Walthier) at Stratus Vineyards in NOTL and continues for six nights, until July 24 World Music Day at Club Lasalle and Sunset Beach in St. Catharines. Details are available at niagara jazz festival.com.

Marinko Jareb is much more than just the resident DJ at both Stratus Vineyards and BarBea Wine Shop and Snack Bar in Niagara-on-the-Lake. He’s a music curator, a musicologist, a world traveller and proponent of electronic dance music (EDM).

Jareb was a regular contributor to FCES! Niagara Magazines for a number of years, and has also written about electronic music for Toronto’s Exclaim! Magazine. He’s been a member of the Niagara Artist’s Centre (NAC) since the mid 1990s and has installed soundscapes there to enhance the gallery experience.

He has also released music and remixes under his own name, is an annual fixture at the Toronto’s Cherry Beach electronic music summer parties, and will be spinning music for the NOTL Chamber of Commerce annual Shades of Summer evening on August 22.

Born in Stuttgart, Germany, Jareb came to Canada at three years old when his family settled in Montreal. Shortly after, his Croatian father, who worked on the liners that travelled the canal, decided to travel the canal, decided to travel the canal, decide danced in Europe, too. The smaller clubs, 300 to 400 people, all closed, and I wasn’t a big enough name to make it into the big spaces.

I had a bit of a career crisis at the time.

To make ends meet, he began to take on day jobs, and also started supplementing his income with every DJ’s bread and butter gig - working weddings. Some newly-married couples in Niagara and elsewhere may not have known at the time they were hiring such a skilled DJ for their big day.

And far from feeling that the weddings were a drag, Jareb took every opportunity to learn more about his craft.

“It actually gave me a good understanding of how music fits into people’s lives,” he reflects, “and brought me a bigger breadth of music. I was able to understand what makes certain songs special and important to people. Some songs might resonate with the bride and groom but maybe not with the whole crowd!”

For Jareb, it was about recognizing the gaps between popular music and what might be important to a specific individual. He began to see the role that music plays in creating an atmosphere, and in sustaining a vibe or a feeling in different situations.

“I took all of those things into consideration,” he says. “I worked with Bellosound, too, a Toronto DJ service that was really forward-thinking in terms of aesthetics and design. They were very conscious of making things on stage look really crisp and cool.”

When Gord’s Place was still open on James Street in St. Catharines, Jareb ran the board for Thursday nights for many years. He remembers a young Niagara Falls kid named Joel Zimmerman, known professionally as deathmask and one of the most successful EDM artists ever, coming in regularly.

“He was under the radar,” Jareb recalls. “He would just hang out, chat with people. He was significantly younger than us, but he was soing it all in. But he was smart, and saw the bigger picture.”

When asked if there was an EDM artist or specific DJ who influenced him, Jareb points to former CENY-FM DJ Chris Sheppard, one of the most in-demand club disc jockeys of the 1980s and 1990s. His Pirate Radio Sessions drew crowds in the biggest clubs across Canada. Through the years, Jareb has surely influenced many like-minded individuals. And he’s often the first to sing the praises of others, such as local artists Distinct Motive (Phil Shore) and Frankie Gunns (Ryan Stevens) of NOTL.

Jareb also lauds Ruffino’s and BarBea owner Ryan Crawford and Stratus Vineyards executive director Suzanne Leslie as two of his biggest supporters.

“I couldn’t have asked for better partners than Ryan and Suzanne,” he raves. “They get the fact that we are working in a very competitive industry. Everybody’s trying to do something unique to differentiate themselves. They both put their faith in me.”

During the early months of the pandemic, Crawford enlisted Jareb to do a series of livestream DJ sessions on the Twitch streaming platform. They got so popular that people started to come down to NOTL to visit Ruffino’s because of the livestreams.

Jareb can be found at one corner of the bar at BarBea on Monday nights, sitting behind his Denon Prime Go DJ mixer attached to his laptop. He reads the room, gauging the crowd for their responses to the music he tries out, and making changes on the fly.

Tonight, the selections consist of a number of obscure funk and disco remixes that provide a perfect backdrop for the visitors sipping wines and enjoying the music.

On Saturdays and Sundays he’s at Stratus from noon until 6 pm.

“Stratus is a beautiful venue, and the wines speak for themselves,” says Jareb. “I’m just there to provide a relaxed, beautiful and kind of trendy backdrop to that experience. I read the demographic and try to provide the music I think they might like.”

And he’s looking forward to the Shades of Summer event, for which he has been providing music for about six years.

“It’s a great night,” he says. “It’s beautiful to see that street transformed, and to see the party atmosphere. It’s a real treat because it only happens once a year. It’s a really beautiful event.”

The indefatigable Jareb of two shows off all his new acquisitions, a three-dimensional camera he plans to use to create images for his soundscapes. He also talks of his idea to rig up his bicycle so he can spin tunes while riding, with the new camera capturing the spectacle for his social media feeds ( @ djimkarino on Instagram).

Last year his track “Sakura” was picked up by a record label based in Cologne, Germany. Jareb says he is working on more new remixes, and is considering self-releasing his music via Bandcamp. And he has a new persona he’s ready to try out.

“I have a mask, and I’m calling myself Kid Chrome,” he says. “It’s a way to make a distinction between my party and festival work, which will be Kid Chrome, and my work with wineries and fine dining, which will stay under the Marinko name.”

A master of reading just about any crowd, you can bet that Marinko Jareb’s Kid Chrome persona will find his own audience.

Meet Predators’ new coach and general manager

Mike Balsom
The Local

This Thursday, June 30 from 11 a.m. until 2 p.m. the Niagara-on-the-Lake community centre is hosting an open house for residents to explore activities that take place at town facilities.

New Niagara Predators general manager Andrew Ferlatte and head coach Kevin Taylor will be at the community centre during that time to represent the team that plays their home games at Virgil’s Meridian Credit Union Arena.

Ferlatte and Taylor are looking forward to introducing themselves to the community and to answering questions about the team’s second season in Niagara.

Predators to hold open skate sessions at the Gale Centre

Also this Thursday, June 30, from 8:30 until 9:30 p.m., the Predators will be holding an open skate session for interested players at the Gale Centre in Niagara Falls. Coach Kevin Taylor says the cost to players is $40 to participate.

Following this Thursday’s skate, the sessions will move to Wednesdays, every other week, also at the Gale Centre. Any interested players from 15 to 21 years of age are welcome to come out.

Dante Massi to play with Swedish team

Dante Massi, the 2021-2022 Niagara Predators forward, has signed a contract to play professional hockey in Sweden for the upcoming season. He’ll be leaving in September for Hagfors, Sweden to play for the Viking Hockey Club. Hagfors is about 330 km northwest of Stockholm.

The speedy 5’7” forward from Niagara Falls joined the Preds last year and led the team in assists, with 59 and points, with 74. Team president and owner Robert Turnbull repeatedly centred out Massi through the season as a team leader, one who was never afraid to dig into the corners for the puck and take on opponents twice his size.

At 22 years old now, the graduate of St. Paul Catholic Secondary School has aged out of the Greater Metro Junior A Hockey League (GMHL) and was ineligible to return to the Predators this year.

With their coaches pitching to them, the seven to nine-year-olds of the NOTL minor softball league had fun improving their skills on a beautiful summer evening on the baseball diamonds. (Photos by Mike Balsom)

Wade Stayzer, Meridian Credit Union’s chief people and culture officer, says sponsorship of the Niagara-on-the-Lake leg of the 2022 Niagara Canada Summer Games Torch Relay is a nod to the organization’s historical presence here.

“Clearly, part of our roots are in Niagara-on-the-Lake,” the lifelong Niagara resident says. “It goes back to the Niagara Credit Union days. When we looked at it from the symbolism perspective, that’s definitely where we wanted to be, in this community.”

Stayzer was chosen as one of the dozen torchbearers for July 30, when the iconic symbol of the games will make its way from Queenston Heights down to the Meridian Credit Union Arena. He’ll have the honour of walking into its final destination for the day, at about 12:30 pm.

“It’s very special for me,” Stayzer says. “There will be lots of Meridian folks there when I walk it into the arena. It’ll be nice to bring it home, and I’m pleased to be a part of it for the people of Niagara-on-the-Lake.”

Stayzer doesn’t have to carry the torch to be a part of the games, though. Meridian is also the volunteer sponsor and Stayzer sits on the board of directors for the games.

“We were in pretty early,” says Stayzer, who is also the credit union’s vice-president of business banking.

“It’s an amazing opportunity to align our culture from a volunteerism perspective. It’s driving some great engagement within our organization.”

As a board member, Stayzer says he understands the potential of the games as an economic driver for the region, as well as the impact it could have on the culture of the community, bringing the whole region together.

“The torch relay is for all abilities, it’s walk, bike or roll,” he explains. “That’s a key piece of the Canada Games. It’s the only event where the athletes and para-athletes compete at the same games. That’s a really important piece for us.”

Stayzer has chosen to walk for the event, saying he’s not a runner. Neither is St. Davids resident Linda Chang, but she has chosen a slightly faster pace for her section of the relay, which is from Line 5 to Four Mile Creek Road.

“It won’t be at a fast pace,” Chang laughs, “I do stay active. I hike a lot and do a bit of yoga too. But I’m definitely not a runner.”

She’ll be joined by her husband Cam and their 18-year-old son William, and she couldn’t be more excited to have been chosen to carry the torch.

“This is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity,” says Chang. “I wanted to represent a segment of the population (Asian-Canadians) that is not visible as far as being engaged in the community. We’re sort of under the radar. I wanted to add some diversity to the mix.”

Chang is also a breast cancer survivor, and that ordeal has certainly influenced her desire to take on the torch relay challenge.

“After you’ve had a life-threatening illness, you want to do something different all the time,” she says. “You want to live life to the fullest. It sounds clichéd but it’s true. I would never have applied for this if I hadn’t fought cancer. When you don’t know how long you’re going to be around you just want to do everything.”

Chang’s cancer was diagnosed as stage two in 2018. She underwent a year of chemotherapy and 36 rounds of radiation, and also had a double mastectomy. Through it all she did her best to continue working at the headmaster’s office at Ridley College.

“I didn’t want to sit at home and feel sorry for myself,” says Chang. “I would have treatment, it would knock me out for five to seven days, then I would go back to work. I’d work a week, then it was back to the chemo chair.”

It went on and on like that for about six months.”

She became involved during that time with Wellspring Niagara, taking all of their programs that support cancer patients, and eventually became a volunteer there.

And Chang is quick to laud the staff at the Walker Family Cancer Centre in St. Catharines for providing her with the best of care.

Chang is definitely not an attention seeker, and was actually a bit reluctant to sit for this interview. But she says that part of her reasoning for wanting to be a torchbearer is to advocate for other women to take care of themselves and know the signs of breast cancer.

“Too many of us are too busy to check, too busy being moms, too busy to take care of our own well-being,” Chang laments. “We must take care of ourselves. Regular self-exams and early detection are so important. We need to be proactive about it. It saves lives.”

Another cause that is near and dear to her heart is the Days for Girls charity. In 2011, Chang spearheaded the formation of a NOTL chapter of the international organization that provides sustainable, reusable feminine hygiene kits for girls and women around the world.

“I love crafting and sewing, and when this came along I felt it was a great way for me to help other women, too,” she says. “When I decided to do it, I was handing my kits to a chapter in Ottawa. I decided to form my own team, and it’s a community show for a little while I helped chapters in Grimsby and Hamilton.”

Eventually, local resident Linda Enns contacted her and began to help with the sewing. Enns was instrumental in growing the team, holding sewing nights at the Niagara United Mennonite Church on Niagara Stone Road. Their kits have gone to girls in Guatemala, the Dominican Republic, Malawi and other places through the international network.

“Kits have also gone to local women through Community Care and United Way Niagara,” says Enns, who helped chapters in Grimsby and Hamilton.

“I’m pretty active, so I don’t think I’ll have any problem getting out the kilo- metre,” she chuckles. “I’m really too busy to think about it. I’m really just telling everyone about it, hoping to raise awareness that the Canada Summer Games are here.”

Chang will also be volunteering at both the opening and closing ceremonies of the games, and hopes to be a specta- tor when she can, as well. And one of those events is happening tonight at NOTL’s Memorial Park.

“I’m interested in tennis,” she says, “and rowing as well. I’ll be out there watching both of those events.”

“This is really about people,” she adds. “It’s about all the 12 municipalities, and the hundreds and hundreds of us involved.”

Small Talk Vineyards closing for good

The colourful Niagara-on-the-Lake winery and cidery called Small Talk Vineyards and Shiny Apple Cider is closing its doors for good at the end of the month.

Owner and CEO of Small Talk, Hank Hunse, calls it “the end of an era.” His father Lambert Hunse purchased the property, located at 1242 Irvine Road, when he came to Canada from the Netherlands in 1954 along with his wife Grace. They originally had a fruit and poultry farm that the family replanted as vineyards in 1985. The then over 200-acre vineyard released its first vintage under the Stonechurch name in 1990.

Eleven years ago, Lambert’s eldest son, Hank, took over the business and began re-branding it as Small Talk Vineyards, and in June 2014 launched Shiny Apple Cider. The property is 27 acres and has 11 grape varieties under vine. Lambert passed away in June, 2020. “It was rebranded into cider because it had higher growth potential than wine,” said Hunse, who is married with four children and eight grandchildren.

Hunse said the reason for the closure can be placed squarely at the feet of COVID-19. The rebranding to include cider took off when he first introduced it to the market and did well through the first year of COVID, but started to falter into the second year. The category relied heavily on bars and festivals for its consumer base and “it just evaporated, it just died and it’s not coming back,” he said.

The Shiny Apple brand was sold to Diamond Estates last August. A neighbour has purchased the estate vineyards, Diamond is taking over the retail facility and some bulk wine and bottled wine is still for sale.

Hunse said he needs to be off the property by the end of October and still needs to sell all the winery equipment and contents of the retail store. All the retail staff went to Diamond. “It’s a crying shame,” Hunse said. “I wish the industry in Niagara lined up together, we need to have our own identity.” He pointed to other regions that focus on one or two grapes and work as an industry to get recognition for what they do best. He laments the fact that in Niagara the industry is fractured. There is no focus, Hunse said.

The winery/cidery will be missed in Niagara. It “prided itself on being the most fun, colourful, happy place in all of wine country. Offering a series of distinctive ciders and wines that expose the dramatic gap between what you say … and what you think.” Sadly, it doesn’t look like Small Talk will be the only victim of COVID-19.
