No word on where 150 Delater St. dogs have been taken

Residents in the Dock Area of Niagara-on-the-Lake continue to express shock following a raid at 115 Delater Street by officials from Provincial Animal Welfare Services last Wednesday.

A spokesperson from the Ministry of the Attorney General confirmed last Thursday that more than 150 dogs were removed from the house, which borders an empty lot on one side, and the parking lot that was previously used by Niagara Jet Boats on the other.

The incident, which took an entire afternoon and involved at least six vans and the Lincoln County Humane Society mobile adoption trailer, has left many nearby homeowners fearful for their own safety.

The residents contacted by The Local preferred to remain anonymous, but some of them confirmed that with the number of dogs that were seized, they were afraid that the alleged puppy mill being run out of the house may have connections to a larger crime organization.

Officials entered the house just before noon last Wednesday and shortly after began transferring a number of small dogs into the vehicles and the trailer.

Officials on hand would not answer questions during the proceedings. Later, Lincoln County Humane Society and Hamilton-Burlington SPCA officials referred to The Local to the Ministry for any updates.

On Wednesday, the Ministry emailed The Local with this information: “The removal of a large number of animals generally involves a high degree of logistics and planning to organize appropriate shelter and veterinary care. When animals are removed during the course of an investigation, AWS leverages boarding facilities, shelters, humane societies, subject matter experts and animal rescue organizations to provide temporary care for the animals while an investigation is underway.”

On Thursday, officials returned to the house to seize the remaining dogs. Mike Balsom

Penny Coles
The Local

Monday morning, after a week of constantly being surrounded by friends and family offering their love and support, Trish Smith and her children said goodbye to husband and father Lukas at an outdoor service at Cornerstone Community Church.

The outpouring of love “has been unbelievable,” says Trish.

“All that love he gave to others, we’re feeling it given back to us. It’s been amazing. We’ve had friends here around the clock. They loved him too, and they’re struggling the same as I am.”

Trish had difficulty putting the enormity of her gratitude into words, knowing she couldn’t have got through the past days without all the people who have supported her, especially with three children who are struggling with their own grief.

Lukas’s friends, she says, “are wrapping their arms around my kids. They’re telling stories about him, they’re making her kids laugh, and distracting them somewhat from all that’s going on around them.”

“Trish describes the funeral, with a simple pine casket designed and handmade with love by his friends. Lukas and his two friends (Wes Wiens and Doug Hiebert) had promised each other in the past years that when the time came they would build a rough pine coffin for each other, and they had carried out his wishes.

“But they never thought they’d be doing it now. They thought they’d all be in their 70s and 80s, at least.”

They also had jerseys made for the funeral, so each of his friends had the name of Lukas’s construction company on one side, the real estate company he had just started working for on the other, and his friends’ names, along with the words, “Love people, live life,” says Trish. “That’s what he did.”

Public opinion sought for gateway project

Councillors have decided to move forward with the Queen and Mississauga bed project, including an opportunity for public input.

After much discussion about whether they were approving the design before them, which includes a stone wall and 25-foot obelisk, councillors were assured they were simply endorsing the Community in Bloom committee’s recommendations, but not approving a final design.

The floral bed that we’re all accustomed to seeing, with its seasonal changes and signage, was installed in the early 80s, councillor Kevin Turcotte, who has been involved in discussions about the bed from the beginning.

 Residents Gerry Kowchuk has donated $250,000 to create a new entrance to the Old Town, wanting a legacy project that will leave a positive lasting impression of the town on all who see it.

Although he is financing it, his goal all along has been to rely on the professionals to create an appropriate, rejuvenated landscape design to be viewed and remembered by all those who drive by the intersection.

There will also be a pilot project with a three-way stop at the intersection, and a bump-out for traffic, but Turcotte assures councillors it is a separate project from the bed, although they will work in tandem.

The chosen landscape firm for the project, Sefarian Design Group from Toronto, eventually created eight different conceptual drawings showing variations of designs. The options were narrowed down to the favoured concept by a Communities in Bloom working group, which includes two town councillors, along with Turcotte.

The Communities in Bloom committee has endorsed the chosen design, while the municipal heritage committee voted to move it forward, but listed about 20 different aspects of the design that require discussion.

The preferred concept incorporates a low, Queenston Quarry limestone wall, the town crest and town name both on it, with an obelisk structure of granite, representing the first lighthouse on the Great Lakes. The intention is for it to be easily seen coming into town, creating a striking first impression, and would include a strong, intricate light plan to make sure it’s just as striking at night. Behind it will be all-season trees, with the two large, mature trees there now to be moved to the town’s Lakeshore Road cemetery, Turcotte explained.

The project is only at the second of six steps. Turcotte said, with a concept design. A much more detailed design plan is the next step, he said, assuring councillors no decisions have been made at this stage.

The final stage, construction, is expected to begin early in 2022.

Although the new design will block the view to Fort Mississauga and the lake, a concern of some residents, it’s been decades since the fort and lake could be seen from that point, explained Coun. John Wiens, although there are other nearby locations by where view is open, he added.

Councillors at Monday’s committee of the whole meeting voted to allowing four weeks for public consultation, chiefly through the town’s Join the Conversation online platform, before it comes back to council for approval.

Historic project completed (almost)

After an archaeologist (left) cleared the historic engine house site near Turntable Way to allow for a restoration project to proceed, the necessary rails were delivered and placed, looking great. The project took just three days, one for the dig, and two to complete the project, although there are still some spikes to drive — willing volunteers can contact Ron Simkus, who is behind the project.

Ron, his wife Irene and other volunteers dug between the columns, cut the timber to size and laid the timber in place Monday. Tuesday they met PGM Rail Services on site and learned how to drive the spikes safely. (Photos by Mike Balsom)

The accompanying historical plaque, as well as a new one for the Turntable on the same street, are expected to arrive. “I feel a sense of accomplishment,” says Simkus. “It’s a demonstration of the imagination and perseverance that our residents have.

There are so many people here that want to contribute, and I hope the town can take advantage of that.” Looking over their work are Jim Reynolds, Pat Hartman, and Simkus.

Lukas was an adventurous family man

He always knew how to make things special, and constantly did things to remind her she was number one in his life, says Wiens. He loved sailing, and said many times in the last months that Bryden was his on the cup ofoutstanding. He loved the sea. They shared many conversations while working on projects, and he was always able to soak up much from his dad about work, life and ethic and how to be a person of integrity. He was so proud of who Bryden was becoming, and the character he displayed through work and friendships.

Lukas was proud of Riley’s heart for others, his strong sense of justice and how he worked so hard to overcome challenges. Riley was always up for an adventure and Lukas loved to encourage him to be creative, fun and lively. Riley and Lukas shared many traits in how they cared for others.

Riley loved hard, just like his dad says, Wiens.

Miaya was Lukas’ princess, and he was absolutely smitten, and he had the time of his life with her. They shared their love for water and spent hours together in the pool. “Miaya is exactly the curly-haired, bright-eyed and joy-filled daughter he had envisioned when he found out he was having a girl. He loved her to the moon and back, and to cut up and cuddle with her. He wanted her to know that she was always loved, and should never settle, that she deserved the best,” says Wiens.

His passion and zest for life came through in his work as well. He began his work life with Chuck Wiens, and then was introduced to framing through Mike Hahn and Will Wiens. These men not only taught him the trade, but set an example to be the mentor that he aspired to be with his own crew and family.

His houses were such good fit for Lukas, says Wiens. He loved the challenge each project presented, and made his own mark on each. He never took the easy way to complete the task, but live up to his own high standards of excellence in doing so. His guys and he were nothing short of a great team. He would agree that he only knew one speed on the job site, and that was going strong and hard.

It was a career that wasn’t always easy on Lukas. He broke multiple bones, but that never stopped him to keep going on from the job site. He worked almost a whole year with pain in his forearms before getting surgery. He was having too much pain and discovering his wrist was actually broken, recovers Wiens. On two occasions, he even worked on a rooftop while connected to an IV bag.

When he broke his back, he could not ride his dirt bike, it was all he could do to not put the tool belt back on and get back to work before his designated recovery time. In the midst of his injuries, and his drive to get jobs done, Lukas continued to pursue the things he so passionately loved to do. All this led Lukas to pursue a career change in the next season of his life.

In the midst of his full-time framing and constant wearing of his back brace, Wiens began his real estate licensing process, accomplishing his goal of getting his accreditation just a few weeks ago.

“It seemed like such a God send when, just days after getting his accreditation, a meeting with Ben Lockyer opened a door for Lukas to be part of Beic’s real estate team. This provided the mentoring Lukas de- sired in starting his new career. We were so blessed to have a community, this circle of friends, who view life the same way.”

Trish says she knows they will continue to be there for her. “They would leave me alone, they wouldn’t leave my kids. I know, if that we needed anything at all, even during the night, they’d be here. And Lukas would have done the same for them. This is a really deep community of people we have to rely on.”

Lukas lived for community, and loved relationships, for considered friends to be family—and it’s the result of his love and caring for others that Trish and their children are experiencing today. She says she’s not the type of person to ask for help, but adds, “Have this. It is not some- thing you can do on your own.”

Trish has also huge gratitude for the larger community — hockey coaches, her kids’ teachers, school staff and others that have reached out to her. “They’re all reminding us we’re not alone. This isn’t our final home. And there will be a time when we’re all together. That definit- ily our belief, and what was instilled in our family. Faith, family and friends. That’s what Lukas believed in, and how he lived his life.”

And she adds, “It’s that we have right now to help us through this. That, and all the prayers around us, will get us through this. We’re so blessed to have this community, this circle of friends, who view life the same way."

Trish says she knows they will continue to be there for her. “They would leave me alone, they wouldn’t leave my kids. I know, if that we needed anything at all, even during the night, they’d be here. And Lukas would have done the same for them. This is a really deep community of people we have to rely on.”

Hub for migrant workers opens in central location

Mike Balsom Special to The Local

With more than 100 Caribbean and Mexican farmworkers visiting a new hub designed just for them on its opening day, organizers declared the initiative a huge success.

Situated in a portable in the parking lot behind Cornerstone Community Church, the hub is full of clothing and household items, all generously donated by the community, mostly via the Buy Nothing NOTL Facebook group, administered by Julia Buxton-Cox.

“This has come about 100 percent because of the generosity of this community,” Buxton-Cox told The Local. “We now have an actual space where, with COVID restrictions easing, we can welcome farmworkers in. Everything we receive is free, and everything we give is free.”

When The Local arrived, volunteers Buxton-Cox and Deanna Hughes were busy sorting through the portable door of clothing from a Fonthill woman, Gina Blake. She owns Blake’s Mens & Formal Wear Shop to Wetland, and had just dropped off about 50 long-sleeved shirts and other items. Blake heard about the hub through the Facebook group.

With almost 2,000 members currently, the Buy Nothing NOTL group is a local offshoot of a worldwide social movement operating in 44 countries. Essentially, it is a gift economy, where members offer and acquire items without exchanging cash. But as the project’s website explains, it also provides an opportunity to find new ways of giving back to their community.

The new farmworkers hub has come about through a grouping together of like-minded individuals and organizations dedicated to bettering the lives of Niagara’s migrant workers.

She says they are currently supporting about 600 Caribbean workers, while another partner, Father Antonio Ilas of the Anglican Diocese of Niagara, supports about 450 Mexican workers through the Migrant Farmworkers Project.

Working together, the coalition was able to secure a COVID relief grant earlier this spring that allowed them to deliver food and hot meals to the workers at the farms where they are employed. The success of the alliance with that project bodes well for future grant applications to ensure the hub can remain viable.

Involved with helping migrant workers for more than 16 years, Andres was thrilled to see the doors open.

“This is a dream come true,” she says. “With farmworkers being marginalized, they don’t have transportation, they work long days. This is the only way to make this happen. We are very grateful to Cornerstone Church. Combined with other nearby services, it becomes part of a nerve centre of sorts for local farms.

With more than 100 Carib- bean workers on the farm, Cordon- stone’s services were moved to the Orchard Park Church building on Hunter Road.

The Cornerstone location seemed an ideal choice for the hub. Combined with other nearby services, it becomes part of a nerve centre of sorts for local farms.

The farmworkers hub opened the doors Thursdays from 4 to 8 p.m. delicately coordinated with the opening hours of the Bikes for Farmworkers program just around the corner at the old Virgil Public School.

Currently there are about 12 volunteers lined up to help with the hub, but the organizers welcome anyone who is interested in helping to sort clothes and assist during open hours. Buxton-Cox points out that they screen for COVID and require all volunteers to be double-vaccinated.

The farmworkers hub accepts donations on site during opening hours only. Thursdays from 4 to 8 p.m. Items that are especially needed are men’s hoodies, long-sleeved button shirts, jeans and work pants sizes 32 to 38, rubber boots and winter lined boots sizes eight to 13, winter jackets, pots, fry pans and clock radios.

Outside of opening hours, clothing and small household items can be donated by contacting Buxton-Cox at 905-483-9171 or by email at buxtoncox@bell.net.

Local VOTES: Time for Canada to do what is right

Jordon Williams Special to The Local

In a recent interview, Prime Minister Trudeau mentioned COVID-19 has created an opportunity to create a Canada that may have other-wise not been possible, and barriers that otherwise may have gone unnoticed previ-ously are now more evident. Niagara-on-the-Lake, our community, has an opportunity, and as a community, has been the first to be travelled and spend much-needed revenue in communities where they feel welcome. By working with out-side organizations that have pro-grams set, and have produced re-sults for other tourist locations, we can immediately get started on recovery. I have been pleased to see local tourism support in-ward a progressive Pride cross-walk in NOTL, and although not absolutely perfect or too expensive, I like what put out that for a minimum invest-ment, much will be returned.

NOTL should be behind the pack in relation to oth-er communities. I have heard that symbols do not matter, but as a gay man, I will be first to say they do. When I moved to NOTL, I felt a need to be discreet as a young man. I had a crosswalk. I feel I had a sent young me a great message. It would say I count. Progressive Pride includes all. NOTL Chamber of Com-merce, makes good economic policy. “The schools, once built and operational, might pay for them- selves that otherwise may not be available to us, and to to equality and inclusion for all, while highlighting our destina-tion as a safe and welcoming area for both LGBTQ+ trav-ellers and those working and living in our community. The team at 124 on Queen Street and Spa would be thrilled to be a part of this celebration in 2023.”

Having partners like these who understand and do not fear progress, but embrace it and understand what symbols and projects like these can do for our community, makes it possible for us to be proud. NOTL will not only create much-needed revenue, but will be a great opportunity to show others who are in the shadows how they matter in our town, and will amplify to the world that we celebrate our past, but look to the future. Having it in a location where thousands walk every day would have the most pow-erful impact, and maximum return on investment.

Lastly I am pleased to an-nounce I am working with a talented team, including NOTL Chamber of Com-merce, local business people, it works, this is exciting! A community that engages with Rainbow on the Lake, a NOTL Pride festival, to visit next year. When I brought this idea for-ward to Eduardo Lafforgue of the NOTL Chamber of Com-merce, he said, “Tourism Ni-gara-on-the-Lake has embraced an inclusive Pride Festival, which will highlight the diver-sity of our cultural experiences as one of Ontario’s most beauti-ful heritage towns.”

Amanda Hanson, Manager of Queen 124, had this to say in regards to Rainbow on the Lake. “Promoting and cele-brating the rights of LGBTQ+ communities is an oppor-tunity to host a Niagara-on-the-Lake Pride festival would demon-strate our true diversity, make our community safer and more welcoming. I am responding to a recent suggestion that all dogs should be leashed while walking on the (off-leash) dog-walking area on the Commons. This seems to be part of continuing efforts by a very determined group trying to shut down the off-leash area in NOTL.

For many years, the dog-walk area has been a great gift by Parks Canada to the literally hundreds of dog owners in NOTL, and has had few problems. For almost 20 years I have been walking two different dogs there, unleashed, with never a problem. I have never witnessed any aggression or threatening actions by any dog. They are all highly socialized with both humans and other dogs. Dogs like to play and just like children, that involves lots of running. They often run toward someone because they are curious and want to meet and greet them, even more so if they have a dog.

There is mention of the “growing dilemma” on the Commons. The dilemma may be in one person’s mind. All the dog owners I have ever met have said that there are exceedingly reason- able, and would never think of bringing a dog near that there is any way a threat to anyone’s safety or could not be controlled. As well, the sign at the beginning of the walk has a very clearly says Dogs Allowed.

If someone has a problem with dogs, perhaps it would be wise not to walk in that area. The Commons is a very large space, and has many other paths to walk.

Many walking paths to choose

With due respect to the latter (Not everyone in NOTL wanted a dock tower cenotaph. The NOTL Local, July 14, 2021), we disagree with the analogy presented. Perhaps a better comparison would be if we were deciding that very tall trees should be planted on the lawn in front of the cenotaph with a big welcome sign so that this very monument, which pays respect to our First and Second World War veterans, were obstructed from the view of those on Queen Street. Our issue is that the town has come sign blocks the view of Fort Mississauga – as do the trees which apparently have been present on the property for more than 5 years. There is an easy solution: ensure that this area is not impeded by re-designing the entry and move those trees which block the view to enhance and create awareness of Fort Mississauga, which is designated by Canada National Historic Sites and Monuments Board.

Our elected officials have the ability to make decisions and preserve what exists today for the greater good of all into the future. When the promised public meeting is scheduled, may your voices loud as the golf course site is owned by Parks Canada, and golfers have the privilege of playing on these historic lands. Parks Canada, the town and citizens of Niagara- on-the-Lake are stewards of this property and it is our collective responsibility to en- sure it remains accessible and visible to residents and visitors a year round.

The private donation by a local citizen to support this project is commendable, and should frame Canadian and Ni- agara-on-the-Lake’s history.

John St. East development not a simple issue

Let’s be clear what you wish for (letter in The Local, July 14). The issue of the Rand- wood Estate is a very complex one. On the one hand, it is re- garded by the town and many of its residents as an iconic, cul- tural and historic site that needs to be protected. On the other, it is a place that has been owned by a development company that, while claiming a similar viewpoint, wants to build a six-story hotel and a high-density residential housing development which, in the opinion of many, would destroy the historic value of this unique site forever. The record of this development company is not well documented for those who may be interested.

To comment on this issue in any meaningful way requires a depth of knowledge and an understanding of its complexities that is sometimes not apparent. This often leads to the easy dams of NIMBY (i.e. name-calling by some, usually from a safe distance) against those who are genuinely try- ing to prevent the historic de- struction of Randwood. Differing view of Egerton Ryerson

In a recent editorial (The Local, July 14) you refer to Egerton Ryerson as a “mon- ster” because he “was instru- mental in taking children away from their families” (he did not), because he “is trying to erase their culture” (he did not) and he “abused” them (he absolutely did not). Many journalists today are resonance Ryerson’s reputa- tion, without ever having read about him. They don’t know, for example, that he spent time living with the Mississauga when he was young, he spoke Ojibway, and wanted only to protect them from being abused (he absolutely did not).

This is a well-written article which provides valuable back- ground information: https://www.dorchesterreview.ca/ blogs/news/the-imbecile-attack-on-egerton-ryerson

The National Post is the only mainsteam newspaper I’ve read that has presented a balanced view: https://nationalpost.com/ news/politics/the-many-canada- dians-who-thought-residential- schools were a good idea.

You can read his five-page, 1847 report on page 70 of this document. You may find helpful before “jumping on the bandwagon”.

Readers and producers of content should respect the facts before commenting further either in the media or on social media.

It was great to get back in the gym at the Community Centre on Saturday morning. Finally, at least in this coun- try, we are seeing light at the end of the tunnel.

To enter the facility I was required to answer a few COVID-related questions. Have you been out of the country in the past 14 days? No.

Do you have any of the following symptoms? No. Are you living with or have you come in contact with anyone with COVID 19? No. But wait, aren’t you going to ask me another question? The most important of all? Are you fully vaccinated against COVID-19?

The view to enhance and create awareness of Fort Mississauga — as do the trees which apparently have been present on the property for more than 5 years. There is an easy solution: ensure that this area is not impeded by re-designing the entry and move those trees which block the view to enhance and create awareness of Fort Mississauga, which is designated by Canada National Historic Sites and Monuments Board.

The Commons is a very large space, and has many other paths to walk.

Hope gardens brighten three areas of NOTL

Penny Coles
The Local

The Town of Niagara-on-the-Lake’s Communities in Bloom Committee is partnering with The Horticultural Society, the Niagara Pumphouse and the McFarland House for a new Hope Garden initiative. Communities in Bloom has encouraged local committees and partners to create bright yellow gardens across Canada for 2021, says local committee chair Vicky Downes.

Volunteers have been busy planting anything yellow in three Niagara-on-the-Lake areas: at the Niagara Pumphouse Arts Centre, McFarland House, and the William Nassau Park, featuring yellow flowers such as sunflowers, black-eyed Susans and chrysanthemums.

There are many gardeners around town eager to volunteer in support of gardens, says Downes, and they’ve embraced this initiative with enthusiasm, creating magnificent gardens, with more yellow blooms to come — the intention is to create seas of yellow. Some seeds have just been planted, and will bloom yellow in weeks to come.

The National CIB has suggested planting flowers, fruits, vegetables or shrubs — anything with yellow, the international colour of hope, says Downes.

She refers to a quote from Desmond Tutu, included in the request from CIB to plant seeds of hope in 2021: “Hope is being able to see that there is light despite all the darkness. Hope whispers that things will get better.”

The campaign represents “hope for us, and hope for the world in 2021.” So many people are turning to gardening, and learning how to create and grow their own food supply.

The surge in gardening during the pandemic has spurred The National Communities In Bloom to invite local committees to join in planting seeds of hope, she says.

If there are others in town who want to join the campaign, she adds, “we would welcome their contact.”
Getting your garden ready for the winter

Joanne Young
Garden Coach/Designer

There are many chores that need to be done in the fall before you put your garden to bed for the winter. But first and foremost, there are many things you can do to prepare your lawn.

Dethatch
Thatch is the layer of slowly decomposing grass stems, dead roots and debris that accumulates above the soil and below the grass blades. Thatch becomes a problem if it is thicker than a quarter-inch, because it stops nutrients and moisture from penetrating to the roots. Use a thatching rake to pull out the soil and below the grass blades. Dethatching is done with a special machine (usually by lawn care companies), but you can also get aerating sandals or hand tools.

Aerating
Aerating is a process whereby small cores of soil are removed from the turf to breakdown hard soils and get more oxygen, which is required by the roots. If you have a sandy soil, you will not need to aerate as often as you do with clay soils. If it has been a very dry summer, aerate your lawn in the fall so the soil will be better able to absorb winter precipitation. Aerating is done with a special machine (usually by lawn care companies), but you can also get aerating sandals or hand tools.

Overseed
Over time your lawn becomes thinner, depending on the amount of sunlight and moisture it receives. Early in mid-fall is a great time to overseed your lawn as a way of thickening it up. The thinner the lawn is, the fewer weeds you will have. Also, the thicker the lawn is, the less the sun will be directly hitting the soil and drying it out, thus, lower amounts of water needed. Before overseeding, mow your lawn as short as you can and rake over the area with a stiff toothed rake to loosen up the soil. Spread the seed on top of the raked soil. Keep seed evenly moist. After two weeks you should be seeing the grass seed germinating.

Fertilize

After two weeks you should be seeing the grass seed germinating.

Fertilize
The final application of fertilizer should be applied about one month before the ground freezes, usually just after the last time you mow your lawn for the season. To help strengthen the lawn's root system for next spring, fertilize with an organic fertilizer that is low in nitrogen and higher in potassium (e.g. 4-3-9). This is the ninth in a 10-week gardening column series, organized by the Niagara-on-the-Lake Communities in Bloom Committee. It is also the first part of two — see next week's Local for tips from Joanne Young about how to prune, plant and other gardening tasks to consider for the fall.

Construction on the new premises for the Niagara Nursery School remain on budget, and on schedule to open in September.

Adam Stewart, chair of the expansion committee, credits the collaboration between the town, which will own the building, the region, which is overseeing the project, and the nursery school.

"I really think the building is amazing. It seemed like an insurmountable amount of work to get to that point, but it is on budget and on schedule. We've been told it could be completed by the end of July, or early August," he says. "It's been a great execution."

"I just had a moment when I was really blown away, thinking some day my kid will be able to use those."

It's "been a monumental task, but we're so close to getting it done."

His three oldest children have all benefited from attending Niagara Nursery School, he says.

Now they're at Crossroads Public School, and he's had the advantage of dropping them off and seeing how confident and happy they are as they wave goodbye, while witnessing other children's distress at being separated from their parents. He credits the nursery school with doing a great job of preparing kids for school. His youngest, Andie, is just a year old, but she will reap the benefit of the expansion, he adds.

Getting the project finished will be a benefit to the town, which will then be able to start renting out the current nursery school space for other programs, likely for seniors, he says.

The only lag in the project has been meeting its fundraising goal. The board expected it to be an easy feat, says Stewart, but that was before COVID. With local businesses and restaurants struggling, the board didn’t want to create added pressure asking for donations, so fundraising has been difficult.

Donating for future generations

There have been some generous donations, but the campaign has not reached its target. The nursery school committed to raising $100,000 to go toward paying off a debenture for the building, and still hopes to surpass its goal, which would also allow for the purchase of more equipment for the kids, and more programming.

“We thought it would be easy to raise $100,000, but local businesses are having a tough time. We’re still looking for funding. The more we have, the more we can offer the kids, with more flexibility to move forward with equipment.

The NNS has purchased some furnishings and play equipment, and by being careful and searching out good deals, some as a result of COVID, they’ve done well. The expansion will help with the more than 100 kids on the waiting list, and will also be one of the first local facilities to have spaces for infants, says Stewart. But it is about so much more than that, he adds.

“It’s not just a building or a school. This offers a foundation for the town, which is changing and growing — one more geared to young families. It’s also a foundation for the community, one that addresses the changing demographics, and offers the next generation of our kids a deep connection and roots to NOTL.”

Donating funds to the expansion, he says, is donating to “the next pillars of NOTL, the children.”

To make a donation, visit https://niagaranurseryschool.ca.

NNS is running its summer program this year, with kids spending as much time outdoors as possible, including Eleanor Colvin, Noah Werner and Weston Stewart cooling off with some water play. (Photos supplied)

Adam Stewart and Jennifer Zabek Stewart have three children who have benefited from NNS, Emmersyn, Georgia (front), and Weston, and Andie will go in the fall.

Celebrating eight years on Queen Street

Submitted by OLiV Tasting Room

Everyone has been waiting. Everyone has been patient. And now, The NOTL Museum can safely say, the doors are open. The NOTL Museum welcomes you back, with a warm, history hug, as they dust off the cobwebs, shake out the new, and open the doors again to members, visitors and tourists.

Opening hours are Thursday to Mondays from 10am to 5pm. And August is already shaping up to be a busy, fun month.

To celebrate community spirit the Museum is hosting a Treasures Sale and Pig Roast on Monday August 2, from 11am to 2pm, at the Museum, 43 Castlereagh Street. This ‘treasures sale’ includes classic antique pieces, exquisite hidden gems, books, and household décor donated by community members. Donations are still being accepted, so check out those hidden boxes.

Plus, the Museum’s portable ‘Tiny Museum’ will be open to explore for the first time. And fans of a ‘pig roast’ can enjoy the enormously popular pork on a bun from PigOut Catering! Keeping with the tradition of community, safety and fun, the Museum is bringing back one of its other hugely popular events, The 5 and Dime Outdoor Film Series. Get ready to laugh out loud at two silent film classics, Charlie Chaplin’s City Lights, Thursday August 19, and Buster Keaton’s The Cameraman, Thursday August 26. Showtime is dusk, outside the Museum, 43 Castlereagh Street.

Bring your own chair and snacks.

And don’t forget to check out the NOTL Museum Community Courtyard – open for chats, picnics, and shelter from the rain, or the sun.

The Museum’s current temporary exhibit ‘Making Her Mark – The Women of Niagara-on-the-Lake’ will remain open until October 24, 2021 and is complemented by a newly published book of the same name, with chapters written by 27 local authors. The book launch will be held on August 9th but interested readers can buy an advance copy at our gift shop which also opened on July 16th!

As the economy of the town re-builds, the Museum will continue to fulfill its role of championing the diversi ty, heritage, and richness that is Niagara-on-the-Lake’s history, and proudly contribute to the Town’s cultural economy. It welcomes back the community at large, and encourages visitors, tourists and businesses alike to join with them in employing awareness and sensitivity to the stewardship that is in our hands, in these new and challenging times.

Even though the purchasing and installation of the structure was costly, the dome has been a good investment for the winery. Part of the total amount was supplemented by a federal development grant awarded to the winery.

If you are interested in coming to the winery but do not want to wait until September for the dome, Niven highlights the Summer Sips tasting experience on the enclosed patio. What are we missing? Family, friends, and eating out

Mike Balsom
Special to The Local

As locals in Niagara-on-the-Lake begin to see a light at the end of the COVID-19 tunnel, it's clear what they have missed the most during the pandemic were those moments spent with family and friends. The Local spent Monday afternoon chatting up residents and business owners about what they missed, and what they most look forward to as staying on-the-Lake they ease and a return to normalcy seems within reach.

Michaela Overweg, Abbie Martin and Ashley Rowe, all three of whom just completed Grade 11 at Laura Secord Secondary School, were enjoying a chance to get together on Queen Street after 16 months kept apart.

"I missed being around my friends a lot," Overweg said, "and I missed social events and stuff. I think I really look forward to things getting back to normal. I miss everyone and everything.”

Martin also said it was hard not seeing her friends during months of social distancing. "She is sincerely hoping that the Virgil Stampede returns in 2022, after it was cancelled for two straight years.

"I missed my family," said Rowe, "and I'm a big swimmer, so I missed all of that too. I'm ready to see all my family again and to get back to normalcy. Family was also the answer from local resident William Mockler.

“I have four grandkids,” he said, “and I hardly saw them for a year and a half. The first thing I did when we were finally able to get together under Step 3 was I hugged them. We're double-vaccinated, and it felt safe, but we did maintain social distance.”

Mockler's grandchildren live in Haliburton and Toronto. This past weekend they all got together at a family home in Alliston for the first time in 16 months.

Paul Dietsch missed the interaction with diners, and is glad to have them back in the Sandtrap Pub & Grill.

Friends Michaela Overweg, Abbie Martin and Ashley Rowe were happy to meet up on Queen Street, after a long time apart.

The first thing I did when we were finally able to get together under Step 3 was I hugged them. "We were finally able to get back to normalcy. "

Ron Ferguson, recipient of the 2007 NOTL Volunteer of the Year Award, was another who missed one-on-one contact with family.

"We did some Facebook encounters, telephone calls and conversations, but it was restricted to that," he told "The Local. "These give us the opportunity to keep in touch, and visually, and that's great, but there's no substitute for face-to-face." Ferguson waxed philosophical about the effect the pandemic has had on his life.

"Our lives have not been unravelled, so to speak, as a result of it," Ferguson explained. "Really, we have been very blessed that we have not physically or otherwise been disturbed, upset or hurt by the pandemic. We've been inconvenienced, that's all I can say."

"We have a group of very close friends with whom we've been meeting each month for over 60 years," he continued, "and that has gone by the wayside. We are now in conversation to re-establish that on a monthly basis, so we are looking forward to that."

"Douglas Mantegna wished that he had been able to travel, and to eat in restaurants over the past 16 months.

"I look forward to the border to the States opening up, so I can go down and see relatives," he added. "I wish everybody would get those darn vaccinations, so we can stop carrying these masks around. I hope we can get the vaccine out to everybody who really doesn't want it."

"Tony Hendricks of Hendricks Valet Mart also missed eating at restaurants during the pandemic. "I look forward to reconnecting with family and friends," said Hendricks, "and maybe I shouldn't be saying this because I own a grocery store, but going out to dinner. It's more for the social aspect of it than anything."

Long-time Shaw Festi-val actor Guy Bannerman explained a recent weird experience that put things into perspective for him.

"I heard some noise coming from across the street," said the skilled storyteller. "I wondered what was strange about it, and then I realized it was the sound of three or four friends sitting in a backyard and talking. Isn't that perfect?"

As for what his plans are now that Ontario is in Step 3 of reopening, family again is the theme.

"My mom is 102, and she's at Pleasant Manor," said Ban-nerman. "I would very much like to get her out, and to get her over to my backyard."

Over the past couple of years, we have seen the damages of COVID-19 in many different industries, some more than others, and are still seeing the severe effects of this pandemic. One of these industries is the restaurant business, specifically the locally owned restaurants, of which Niagara-on-the-Lake has many.

On Friday, the province moved to Step 3 of reopening, which allows for indoor dining, with no limits on the number of patrons per table. Physical distancing and other restrictions will remain in effect. The decision comes in response to the number of vaccinations that have been administered, and continuing improvements in the number of daily cases, hospitalizations and intensive care admissions.

In the past 17 months, the pandemic has caused regulations that have, in some stages, seen restaurants unable to invite customers inside, or on outdoor patios, restricted to takeout only.

At times restaurants were restricted from taking certain customers, such as groups that were not familiar with particular parts of their business, as they continued to pay rent on their premises. Nevertheless, this is only some of the damage restaurants have had to suffer throughout COVID-19. Businesses such as these, especially in Niagara-on-the-Lake, have been forced to pay high rents, with little or no income, notwithstanding some landlords who have been generous throughout the pandemic. But when your business has no income, it is difficult to maintain a healthy financial situation.

At the beginning of 2020, we were all surprised at how great an impact a new disease by the name of Coronavirus had on our everyday lives. The government began to place and enforce new restrictions on when we could go outside and where we could go.

That is not to say these restrictions were not necessary, as many people were beginning to suffer from the effects of COVID-19. And some businesses are still suffering. Around March 2020, as case numbers began to increase, so did restrictions, as the government feared that their hospital capacity would not be able to handle the high number of cases.

Provincial governments began to target businesses that were not essential, and could be an outbreak risk. This involved shutting down all restaurants and restricting any forms of gatherings. Without gatherings, this gave people less of a reason to order takeout from restaurants too.

Although following this, things began to calm down and cases began to decrease last summer and we saw the provincial government minimize some of their restrictions on restaurants.

Nonetheless, during the second and third waves, the restrictions were right back in place, and restaurants again had to shut down.

Although we move into Step 3 of the reopening process Friday, restaurant owners say it will be hard to recover from the pandemic results. Employees especially will be hard to replace.

John Eymann, co-owner of Bricks & Barley in Virgil, says he has lost at least 25 percent of his staff since the restaurant has re-opened, mostly because people took other jobs during the shutdowns in order to pay their bills. He says one of the significant factors for Bricks & Barley surviving through this pandemic was a pre-built patio.

However, many smaller restaurants did not have that advantage going into the pandemic and have suffered because of this. “We are all in this together,” says Eymann, meaning we need to be understanding and supportive through a challenging period in their industry.

The restaurant kept the core staff employed as they continued to give the staff full hours even if not busy. As they want their staff to remain on the payroll.

As Step 3 approached, the staff at Bricks & Barley were working hard getting the dining room ready to receive guests once again and see some familiar faces, adds Eymann.

“We thank our locals for their support during the COVID-19 pandemic. Please go to our website to reserve your table either inside our dining room or on our beautiful, covered patio,” he says.

“We are a well-loved local spot, and we encourage locals to continue to support businesses the best they can.”

Paul Dietsch, co-owner of the Sandtrap Pub & Grill, says going into Step 3 gives us more occupancy. Many locals know patios are already busy, due to limited seating, and may be hesitant to come out due to waiting times. However, now that inside is opening, this gives us a lot of new seats, meaning short wait times if at all.”

The restaurant owners feel a lot more at ease knowing that the provincial cases are going down, and a large number of people are vaccinated, says Dietsch. “Additional-ly, the restaurant will still be following all protocols in place by the province, with tables six feet apart, plexiglass in place and all staff are being screened when coming in. It’s time to come out and enjoy time with friends and see people they have not seen in a while. Let’s continue to move forward.”

Supporting local restaurants is vital for helping our economy return to normal, the most obvious way would be giving them our business, whether eating on their patio or ordering takeout, as we were able to do during Step 2, and now, if we’re comfortable, dining indoors.

Jeremy Harb, food and beverage manager of the Prince of Wales restaurant, says not having indoor dining has directly impacted them while trying to accommodate all guests. Patio dining is subject to weather conditions. Guests have been very empathetic throughout this pandemic as they realize the struggles restaurants have experienced, he says.

However, the adaptability of the Prince of Wales has been a crucial factor to accommodating all guests, as their company encourages outdoor thinking.

Harb also points out exactly how important local support is. Locals are essential to their business, says he, a vital component of their restaurant — with new and familiar promotions offered, local support has been an enormous help.

As restaurants reopen, physical distancing will still be required, and circumstances are not ideal. However, this situation is not going to get any better if we do not recognize who is struggling, and attempt to assist them.

Local artist hosts garden show and sale

A fantasy garden is a perfect place for an artist to show her work, especially when most of it is outdoors, and of gardens.

THE NOTL Local

Local artist hosts garden show and sale

Artist Magdalena Titian has always loved outdoor art shows.

She’s been part of them at the Niagara Pumphouse Arts Centre from its earliest days, even before its restoration — she was the first art instructor.

“It was nice in the building, with old, cracked windows, and it still had the pump in the front room,” she says. “But most of the shows at that time were outdoors.”

And she loves to paint en plein air, outdoors, she says.

At the moment, she’s excited about a show she is planning in her own garden beside her Gate Street home, which she discovered more than 40 years ago when she came to NOTL. Since then, she’s painted many gardens, and in many gardens — her signature beautiful vibrant watercolours for which she has become known.

The idea for this show came to her as a result of the loss of trees that bordered her home, when a new neighbour removed a row of mature cedars to build a fence, and she created a garden to fill the empty space.

She and the previous neighbour had planted the trees together years ago, she says, and it broke her heart to see them go.

But she has been creative, moving plants around on her large property to fill what she is calling her fantasy garden. After adding soil and loads of mulch, she has also brought out some of the clay figures she has collected on her travels around the world, places like Mexico and Guatemala, one almost five feet tall.

“It’s been a lot of work. This property is a lot of work, 210 feet deep with a woodlot at the back.” And a row of eight to 12 oaks that have to come down, she says.

While she finds it a lot to take care of at this stage in her life, she hasn’t found any alternatives that would entice her to leave her historic home that drew her from Toronto, on a street that allows her to walk to the grocery store or pharmacy, the post office and coffee shops.

“These are all the reasons I came here,” she says. She can’t envision where she would go, if she left her 1840 cottage, built by an escaped slave, a cobbler, who worked in a barn in the back and lived in the house with his six daughters.

In decades past, as well as being an art instructor, and painting local landscapes, she has also traveled to many countries, sometimes leading tours with groups of students, painting a wide variety of landscapes.

She’s painted her way across Canada in an RV, from Nova Scotia to B.C. and down through California, and although traveling has been off the table for a while, if and when it’s possible, she’d love to visit Italy again to paint its beautiful gardens.

But it is mostly local landscapes and gardens she will be putting outside for her upcoming show.

Most of her paintings are large — typically she paints 28 inches by 36 inches — but she will also bring out a portfolio of smaller works.

She’s hoping for good weather July 31 and Aug. 1, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m., but if not, she has a rain date of Aug. 6 and 7 for the following weekend, same times, at 429 Gate St.

''Most of his communication was never any mention of details from the house. There was never any mention of charges laid in the incident. One woman from a suburb of Montreal called The Local this week, saying she had read about the raid, and was looking for a contact to see if she might find her dogs, which were stolen from her fenced yard two years ago. As unlikely as it seems that they would be found after such an interval, she has made almost a full-time job of searching for her two male poodle-brussel griffons after learning dogs are often stolen for puppy mills, and transportation of the dogs from Quebec to Ontario is common. She spoke of the huge organized rings and money to be made, and the many dogs that are stolen on an annual basis.

A representative of the Lincoln County Humane Society said they have received similar requests from people who have had their dogs stolen, and referred The Local to the Ministry that would provide such information about stolen dogs, although by press time no answer had been received.

On April 1, Scauzillo confirmed Grein's and Biondi's names were on the lease. About seven weeks ago, Scauzillo visited the property. He knocked on the door but no one answered. When no one was home at the time, he proceeded to do some maintenance work in the two out-buildings at the back of the property.

During the conversation with Scauzillo, he informed The Local that he would most likely be making a trip to NOTL late last week. Attempts to contact him for an update were unsuccessful. Prior to the raid, some residents observed large buses and trucks being moved back and forth, and said there had been increased activity over the past few evenings, with people arriving at the house in the middle of the night and leaving in their cars with dogs.

Some who live nearby reported an odour coming from the house that seemed to get worse during recent hotter days. They also reported many garbage bags being put out at number 115 Delater Street, and an infestation of flies along the street. Some said their own dogs seemed distressed and often began to bark in the middle of the night.

A number of residents on Delater Street began to report their observations to the Ontario SPCA, and that culmination in the activity last Wednesday.

Neighbours say that since the incident last week they have noticed no activity around the house whatsoever. In such a quiet neighbourhood, residents remain perplexed as to how this could have been occurring right under their noses. To the best of their knowledge, the tenants of the house, with no air conditioning and windows covered by thick drapes, blankets and towels, are still living there. Besides the fear they are living with, the general consensus in the Dock Area is that they are anxious to hear about any charges being laid against the residents of the house, and they would love to know the fate of the dogs that were removed.

At press time there continued to be no word on any charges laid in the incident. One woman from a suburb of Montreal called The Local this week, saying she had read about the raid, and was looking for a contact to see if she might find her dogs, which were stolen from her fenced yard two years ago. As unlikely as it seems that they would be found after such an interval, she has made almost a full-time job of searching for her two male poodle-brussel griffons after learning dogs are often stolen for puppy mills, and transportation of the dogs from Quebec to Ontario is common. Local musician offers top quality production services

Instruments line every wall in every room in Niagara-on-the-Lake native Jay Baty’s basement studio. Acoustic and electric guitars, drum kits, various electric bass guitars, ukuleles, even something dubbed the Frankenslyde (more on that in a moment) are all set the scene for what Baty hopes becomes the go-to studio for local musicians and those from outside of Niagara to get the professional sound quality they are looking for on their recordings and live sessions.

For now, freshly Squeezed Studios sits in the Niagara Falls basement Baty shares with his partner Tami Rigg. She runs a holistic hypnotherapy business on the main floor, while Jay paces his musical trade below. He hopes to one day move his equipment to an off-site location.

Since his days playing in bands while attending Niagara-on-the-Lake District Secondary School, Baty has always known he wanted a career in the music business. The guitarist’s high school bands included Paris Progress (a Grateful Dead-styled group that featured horns and two drummers/percussionists playing extended jams) and later a band called Anglo Saxon.

During that time, Baty realized that if he wanted to make a living in the music industry, he would have to explore other ways outside of performance to do so.

He enrolled in Mississauga’s Metalworks Institute to study production and music business management. His goal was to grow his talent in all aspects, especially with regards to live and in-studio production.

After graduating from the two-year program in 2011, he caught on with Niagara A/V Systems, doing live sound at various venues across the region, and beyond, including Toronto’s Harbourfront and in Niagara Falls at the Queen Street Theatre and Fallsview Casino. Now called Production Service Industries (PSI), he hopes to be back with them when live music returns.

He also connected with legendary Niagara musician Rick Rose, and helped him build his Tangerine Studio in Niagara Falls. That facility was located first in Rose’s Niagara Institute of Music school, then moved to a stand-alone location in an industrial plaza near Morrison Street in Niagara Falls.

During that time, Baty had been piecing together his own recording equipment, a hobby he said began 12 years ago, when he laid a guitar on top of some square microphones, setting up a rudimentary single-track recorder wired to his Windows 95 computer.

When Tangerine closed, Baty went full-speed-ahead to upgrade the equipment he had been amassing to a fully digital set-up.

To date, he estimates he’s sunk at least $60,000 into Freshly Squeezed Studios. He offers full production services out of a number of rooms in his basement.

“I’ve got all the bells and whistles to make beats,” he says, “and all the wonderful plug-ins, Auto-Tune, Vocalsynth, Ableton Live, and all the wonderful things that are there to punch up the sound to a clinical level.”

He uses a number of professional microphones to record, and has an array of equalizers, compressors and effects at his disposal to punch up the sound to a client’s liking.

He refers to his sound board as a live desk, one he can easily remove from the studio to use at live gigs. It’s customizable, imported from the U.K., and connected to all the other rooms in his studio (a vocal booth, a drum booth, and a live jamming room).

The walls in the spacious control room are lined with soundproof panels Baty created himself. He seized an opportunity to acquire yards of fabric for free through his connection with Rose. He cut the fabric to size and set about wrapping the sections to 2 by 4 frames covered in fabric insulation. He estimates the fabric would have cost him close to $10,000.

Baty says his inventive ness is something he inherited from his father, an instrumentation technician at General Motors. Jay learned how to solder at 12 years old, and that skill came in handy when wiring the cables himself from room to room and back to the console.

“I was one of those kids who loved taking things apart,” Baty remembers. “I would unscrew an old VCR system to check out the parts. I would never put anything together back then, though.”

He remembers getting his first guitar at age 10. He grabbed his father’s video camera, headed to the basement, and danced around to music from Rob Zombie and California band No Doubt.

It took three years before he finally decided to sign up for lessons from Jeff Bond of Niagara Falls, who he calls today his “favorite human.”

First and foremost a musician, Baty says performing is where he derives the most joy, but he also gets a great amount of pleasure helping others realize their musical dreams.

He describes two artists he’s worked with recently, one a refugee of sorts from Ukraine, and another from Trinidad and Tobago. Baty talks of helping each find the best way to use their vocal range and limitations, suggesting ways to bring their musical visions to fruition.

At times he has to be a bit of a psychologist, convincing clients to get beyond their fears of taking their music to the next level.

The Freshly Squeezed website (freshlysqueezestudios.ca) lists some of his past productions, including Mrs. Johnson, Rita Carrey and Local band The Broken Lye. He has also worked with Canadian rapper Classified and Vancouver pop punk band Living Lions.

Baty and bandmate Kyle Petch produced and engineered its debut album, Breathe in Oblivion, the most recent release, by his current band, Theatre Crisp. The nine tracks on the recording are sonicly punchy. Baty weaves the scratching and cutting from DJ K-Flip seamlessly into the mix with guitars, bass and drums, punctuated by blasts of horn, while frontman Petch raps and sings through each track.

The production would stand up to anything you might hear on pop or rock radio in 2021.

Earlier this week, he re leased his latest production, a music video for a song called Good Day by bandmate Petch under his alias humbleHAB. The track was produced, recorded and mixed by Baty.

About that Frankenslyde mentioned earlier.

“It was a school project for Metalworks Institute,” Baty explains. “I built it out of parts laying around the house, with the head of an old guitar stuffed into a 2x4. It was supposed to be an acoustic instrument but I just wanted to build it so bad that I went with the electric slide guitar. I still got 96 per cent on the project!”

The Frankenslyde found its way into its recording by a Milton-based singer-songwriter Michael Bards. At about the two-minute mark of Cardigan, Baty can be heard shudding up and down the fretboard, providing an eerie, pedal steel-like punctuation to the final minute of the track.

It’s a perfect example of how a good producer can quietly put his own personal stamp on a recording while maintaining the integrity of the song.

It's a Tuesday night and I'm pulling up to the Serluca farm on Concession 2, the car loaded with groceries. Dan, the farm owner, greets me with a big smile and waves me in towards the bunkhouse. A young man is sitting on the steps, engrossed in his phone message. I greet him in Jamaican patois from my car and he looks up, startled. I don't recognize him and assume he's new to the farm. Some of his coworkers amble out of the kitchen and onto the porch to check out the visitor; their faces lighting up in recognition. The tantalizing aroma of pimento, garlic, and jerk spices are wafting out of the open door. It's been over a year since we've seen each other because of COVID restrictions, and the joy of this unexpected visit is mutual.

There have been no hugs or handshakes the past 16 months, but their smiles radiate warmth even at 20 feet away.

I ask the young man his name and where he's from. The men laugh when Kemar says "Jamaica," and look at each other knowingly. They understand where this conversation is going. When I enquire about his hometown, the conversation goes back and forth, and he is emphatic I would have never heard of his small hometown.

"Maybe I've been there. Maybe I've even driven by your house.

He laughs, rolling his eyes. "I don't think so. Long Bough is just a likkle town, wet out inna bush."

When I inform him that I had indeed stayed in the town of Long Bough, his eyebrows shoot up, the other men laughing at how I played "connection" game.

I tell him I went to Long Bough in February, 2020, to stay at the home of Delroy and Joan Castella. Delroy had been coming to work in my neighbourhood for 35 years, and in 2019 suffered a stroke during harvest. I spoke of the many people who connected with Delroy over the months he stayed with us during his recovery, which resulted in him being the guest of honour at the Candlelight Stroll in December before he returned home. I describe how he lit the first candle that night, passing the flame to the lord mayor, who in turn passed it on to others until eventually the whole street was filled with the warm glow of thousands of flickering candles.

Kemar shakes his head incredulously. He explains that he lives just down the road from Delroy and Joan, and that his mom attends the same church.

Finding ways to connect in conversation whether at the grocery store, in the bank or on the roadside is an exercise in joy! It amazes me how quickly a relationship can progress from being a stranger to a neighbour who feels welcome and appreciated.

When I started volunteering 16 years ago, I observed that migrant workers employed on local farms were not welcome by many in our community, despite the fact that our agricultural industry is totally dependent on them to survive.

After our first trip to Jamaica in 2007, I returned home with a new appreciation of the sacrifices required by these men and women and their families. Providing a warm welcome to our neighbours on the farms creates an opportunity to connect, but also means a lot to their families, who are keenly aware of their loved ones' experiences on the farms and in the community.

That year some friends and I began making soup and sandwiches to greet the workers arriving at farms in our neighbourhood, many who go almost 24 hours without a decent meal during their travels. Soon after we put together welcome bags containing essentials to help them get through the first few days after arrival.

This idea has taken root and expanded in ways we could not have imagined, as more locals contribute to show support.

More than 575 Caribbean workers received welcome kits in 2021, and we're not finished yet, with more emerging from mandatory quarantine in the next week. We have also delivered boxes of gloves, socks, neck buffs, toques, and essentials for some employers to distribute to their staff.

This year we created activity booklets for use during quarantine, which include two maps and practical information, such as hiking distances from Virgil to Walmart, etc.

Welcome kits are a simple, inexpensive idea for locals of all ages who want to connect and express appreciation. News seems to be spreading about the great community spirit in Niagara-on-the-Lake, and people elsewhere in Ontario are contacting us, wanting to know how to provide support to farm workers in their own rural areas.

We primarily reach out to the Caribbean men and women. Rev. Antonio Ilas and his wife Cida are the energetic duo who head up the Migrant Farmworker Project run by the Anglican Diocese of Niagara to care for the Spanish speaking farm workers. We share resources and work together to see how we can best meet the practical needs of all farm workers.

Regardless of where we are from, there is one thing that we all agree on: there is no substitute for personal connection, that Zoom can in no way replace a hug or heartfelt conversation. This past year, many of us have gained a better understanding of the hardships of long-distance family relationships as experienced by farm workers, who for the duration of their eight-month to two-year contracts have only a tiny screen, and very limited data on their phone, to keep those threads of relationship intact.

Our fresh appreciation for human connection and face-to-face conversation has resulted in a growing number of cross-cultural friendships in our little corner of Niagara. Moving to Steps 2 and 3, I hear the sounds of children playing and backyard conversations, a mix of Jamaican patois and laughter floating over the fence as families invite their Caribbean neighbours over for a Red Stripe and a time to relax, enjoying life together.

Recounting the story of Delroy to Kemar and his coworkers reminded me of how connecting with those who have traditionally been marginalized can transform a community, enriching all of us in the process.

Heart disease occurs when the blood vessels that supply blood to the heart become narrowed. This can cause shortness of breath, chest pain, or other signs of heart disease.

Narrowing of the blood vessels that supply blood to the heart is a medical term called atherosclerosis. Blockage of a large artery results in stroke with noticeable muscular weakness, but blockage of smaller blood vessels can lead to many tiny strokes, causing the death of tiny bits of brain tissue. If enough of these smaller strokes occur, vascular dementia results.

There are five preventable and treatable health conditions that impede oxygen reaching your brain. Healthy arteries are flexible, strong, and elastic. Their inner lining is smooth so that blood flows freely, supplying vital organs and tissues with adequate nutrients and oxygen. However, high blood pressure, type 2 diabetes, high cholesterol, atrial fibrillation and mini-strokes all damage blood vessels, thus impeding the flow of blood to the brain.

If you have high blood pressure, the increased pressure of blood flowing through your arteries gradually can cause a variety of problems, including damage to the cells of your arteries’ inner lining. That predisposes a series of events that make artery walls thick and stiff, a disease called arteriosclerosis or hardening of the arteries. Puts from your diet enter your bloodstream, pass through the damaged cells, and collect in clumps on the vessel walls, that is, atherosclerosis. The only way to know whether you have high blood pressure is to have it measured. Anyone over the age of 40 should have it checked regularly, at the very least every couple of years. Once high blood pressure is diagnosed, it can be treated with lifestyle modifications as well as using drugs.

Type 2 diabetes (non-insulin dependent) is completely different from type 1 diabetes (insulin dependent), which is a very rare illness. Type 2 diabetes can be prevented and very effectively managed. It may damage the blood, but its main negative impact is increasing the risk of atherosclerosis, the porridge-like material that builds up in the walls of arteries. Atherosclerosis blocks blood supply to the brain either slowly or quickly when a clot forms. Preventing and managing type 2 diabetes is an important way of preventing this. Medications are effective, but increasing physical activity and decreasing energy intake are even more important. These lifestyle interventions can help control and even cure type 2 diabetes. The modern environment makes it difficult to implement these interventions, for instance, the portion size of the food we eat is needed of the dangers of the modern environment, for example those that lurk beside every checkout where calorie rich food packages are stacked high.

Although cholesterol is essential for all body tissues to function properly, it is also a key component in forming plaques that build up in arteries. Total blood cholesterol levels greater or equal to 5.2 mmol/L are considered a risk factor for cardiovascular disease. Cholesterol levels are lowered by taking statins, which also reduce the risk of atherosclerosis and therefore the risk of heart attacks and other cardiovascular diseases.

Atrial fibrillation is a condition where the heart beats irregularly, allowing small, dots to form, which can then break off and be carried in the blood stream toward the brain, potentially resulting in strokes. It is the result of a variety of causes, including high blood pressure and damage to the heart through arteriosclerosis or hardening of the arteries. Check your own pulse regularly, Atrial fibrillation tends to occur more frequently when we grow older and have high blood pressure.

Some medical conditions also increase your chances of developing it, including heart problems such as coronary heart disease, or disease of your heart’s valves. It can also be caused by other conditions, including an overactive thyroid gland, lung infections like pneumonia, or a blood clot in the lung (pulmonary embolism). Drinking too much alcohol or caffeine, taking illegal drugs, such as cocaine or amphetamines, or smoking can also trigger atrial fibrillation, which usually requires treatment to control the condition, as well as treatment to reduce your risk of stroke. This may involve taking drugs called anti-arrhythmics, which act by treating your heart rhythm, making it more regular as well as slowing your heart rate. It is likely you will also be given other drugs, called anticoagulants, to reduce the chances of developing small clots.

Silent strokes are small strokes that affect parts of the brain that often go unnoticed. Mini strokes or transient ischemic attacks (TIAs) occur when there is a temporary drop in the blood supply to the brain, leading to temporary stroke-like symptoms. Most of them are caused by clots blocking the blood vessels (ischemic strokes) and in other cases, the damaged blood vessels wall leak and cause a bleed in the brain (hemorrhagic strokes). As with the previously mentioned health conditions, TIs can be prevented by physical activity, not smoking, not being overweight and a Mediterranean diet.

It’s never too late. Studies show that physical activity (the miracle cure), not smoking, maintaining a healthy weight and a Mediterranean diet can have a positive effect on your health, no matter when you start.
