The NDP's Lise Vaugeois finished a close second in 2018 in Thunder Bay-Superior North, but won the seat in her second attempt.

Vaugeois wins

By Leith Dunick - TB Source

After 27 years under Liberal red, Thunder Bay-Superior North has been coloured orange.

The NDP's Lise Vaugeois, who narrowly lost to long-time Liberal MPP and cabinet minister Michael Gravelle four years ago, knocked off Conservative challenger Peng You, a popular Thunder Bay city councillor, to take the riding by 800 votes, with all 90 polls reporting. Liberal Shelby Ch'ng, a lastminute replacement for Gravelle, who stepped aside for health reasons, took third place, some 1,438 votes behind Vaugeois.

The Green Party's Tracey MacKinnon was a distant fourth, with three per cent of the vote.

Vaugeois said she knows she's got big shoes to fill, but is up for the task to champion Northwestern Ontario at Queen's Park.

"It's getting out there, spending time in every part of the region, talking to people, which is what we've been doing, but it's doing it more and then bringing those ideas back to Queen's Park and making sure we can find solutions that actually work for our communities," Vaugeois said.

It's not going to be easy, she acknowledged.

"It's going to be a challenge. There's no point in sugar-coating that part of it. But I am prepared to fight. I'm small, but very mighty and I will fight tooth and nail to make sure this region gets what it deserves and what it needs," Vaugeois said.

Affordable housing and health care top her list of priorities to push for once she's sworn in as a member of the legislature as the riding's first NDP representative.

It was a disappointing night for You, who captured

30.9 per cent of the vote to finish in second."I really thought people wanted change," said You, who did not commit to running municipally in October.

"It is what it is, the result. I congratulate every candidate for their time and effort to the public service."

Ch'ng, who represents the Northwood ward at city hall, said it was a rushed campaign, with just threeand-a-half weeks to prepare when Gravelle announced he was stepping down.

"I knew I was coming in as an underdog," said Ch'ng, who also left her political future up in the air.

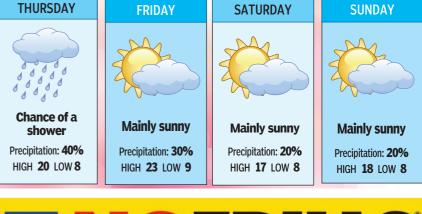

"We didn't have official party status. Our leader was fighting for his seat as well. I'm just happy that all my friends came out and supported me. It was probably the most alive I've felt in the last two years."

Vaugeois, while disappointed that NDP incumbent Judith Monteith-Farrell lost to Conservative Kevin Holland in Thunder Bay-Atikokan, said she's glad at least one member of the government will have a clear understanding of the needs in Northwestern Ontario.

"I know I'll get a lot of advice and guidance from Judith. I really respect the experience she's gotten over the past four years, but I'm also happy to work with Kevin Holland. If we both have the interest of the region at heart we'll be able to work well together."

The Conservatives, under Doug Ford, won a resounding majority, taking 83 of the 124 seats. The NDP won 31 and the Green Party took one seat. Both Liberal leader Steven Del Duca and NDP Leader Andrea Horwath announced they were stepping down from their posts.

PC's Holland makes TB-A history

By Ian Kaufman and Justin Hardy – TB Source

Kevin Holland has taken the Thunder Bay-Atikokan riding for the Progressive Conservative Party, ending decades of Liberal and NDP rule in the city's south end.

"I'm humbled by the trust that the people in Thunder Bay-Atikokan have given me to represent them in Queen's Park," he said.

"I'm excited for the opportunities that we have and I'm thrilled to be able to go down and do the work that needs to be done for Thunder Bay-Atikokan."

Holland, the mayor of Conmee Township for a quarter century, toppled incumbent Judith Monteith-Farrell of the NDP.

Holland received 9,657 votes, or 36.3 per cent. The win is a remarkable turnaround for the PCs in the riding, after scoring just 13 per cent of the vote in 2014, and 23 per cent in 2018.

with 8,759 votes (32.9 per cent), while Liberal Rob Barrett came in third with 6,486 votes (24.4 per cent).

Eric Arner of the Greens pulled in 781 votes (2.9 per cent), New Blue candidate David Tommasini received 529 votes (1.99 per cent), Dan Criger of the Ontario Party received 248 votes (0.9 per cent), and Kenneth Jones of the Northern Ontario Party received 138 votes (0.5 per cent).

Voter turnout was down sharply in the riding, falling to just under 43 per cent.

Holland pledged a focus on health care, mental health, and addictions during the campaign, as well as fiscal responsibility. He also argued having a government MPP at Queen's Park would benefit the region.

He pulled off the victory despite skipping local debates, like a number of other PC candidates across the province. He attributed his win to the personal connections he made in his grassroots approach.

"I was able to connect with people at their doors, at our open houses, in the community, wherever I was speaking with people," he said. "That's what I've done throughout my 3l years as mayor of my community and people want to be heard, they want to know that people are hearing them, listening to them, but also taking steps to act on what they're saying to them."

The Thunder Bay–Atikokan riding was held by the Liberals from its creation in 1999 until 2018, with now-mayor Bill Mauro holding it from 2003 to 2018. Monteith-Farrell broke that streak in 2018, when she toppled Mauro, a cabinet minister, by fewer than 100 votes.

Monteith-Farrell gave an emotional speech conceding the race to supporters at the Columbus Centre on Thursday night, saying she worried a PC government won't prioritize people's health and wellbeing.

While painful, she said the defeat wasn't a total surprise.

"We knew it was a three-way race last time, and I knew Kevin was a strong candidate," she said. "There's been a lot of effort by the Conservative government to take this seat, and they were successful."

She pointed to anti-Trudeau sentiment, and his government's recent agreement with the federal NDP, as one factor driving PC support.

"They thought the NDP was aligned with the Liberals federally, and so they were angry at that," she said of feedback from constituents on the campaign trail.

Speedway's first season set to go

Races will be held every Wednesday night at new track

By Justin Hardy - TB Source

Wednesday night dirt track racing is back this summer at Thunder City Speedway which held a grand opening invitational this weekend to welcome both drivers and racing fans back to the track.

"It's a very nice facility. I love coming here every year. Last year it was awesome coming here as well," said Tanner Williamson who won the A-mods feature on Saturday.

Last year Thunder City Speedway only held a few races at the end of summer and Williamson, like many other drivers was excited to be back with a full schedule.

"Now that they're having a full schedule this year in Thunder Bay at the Thunder City Speedway, I'd like to come here for more than just the specials," he said. "But as of right now, I'll be here for mostly all the specials and the Wednesday night racing really makes for a great schedule."

The track this weekend was a little dry and dusty; crews did their best to wet the track to try and keep the dust down but Williamson says the dusty track just gives drivers a chance to show off some skills.

"The track this weekend has been a lot different than the invitational last year, but I have really enjoyed this track," he said. "The dry race track makes for a very competitive race against all drivers and it really brings the talent out of a certain few that can get to the front."

This summer's race schedule can be found on the Rock94 website which partnered with Thunder City Speedway this year.

More information about Thunder City Speedway can be found on their Facebook page.

Voters stay away

EDITORIAL

Voter apathy is the story of the 2022 provincial election.

Just 43 per cent of eligible voters bothered to cast a ballot, a sharp drop from the almost as bad 58 per cent that turned out at the polls four years earlier.

The race was decided for months, and neither the Liberals nor the NDP leaders did much to inspire a call for change on the campaign trail.

Not surprisingly Steven Del Duca and Andrea Horwath both resigned on election night, Del Duca's party once again left without official party status.

Locally, voters elected a pair of strong candidates, including a historic win for Conservative Kevin Holland in Thunder Bay-Atikokan.

The longtime Conmee mayor is well versed in provincial politics and knows the impact decisions made at Queen's Park can have on municipalities in the Northwest. He'll be an asset for the region, though he may have to wait a few years for a turn in cabinet.

The NDP's Lise Vaugeois will also be a strong voice for the people of Thunder Bay-Superior North, though with just 31 seats, her party won't have much of a say in policy.

Best of luck to both newly elected MPPs. You've got your work cut out.

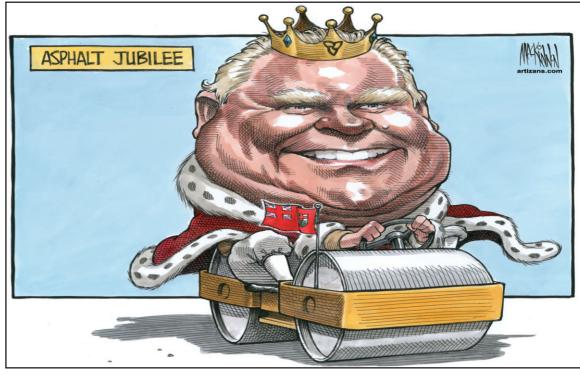

Relay for Life returns To the editor:

For more than 20 years, Canadians, including Thunder Bay residents have united with communities across the country to support the Canadian Cancer Society Relay For Life and provide hope to all those living with and beyond cancer.

After two years of a virtual format due to the pandemic, this year, we are excited to announce the return of Relay For Life inperson events!

We're looking forward to safely gathering in person, raising funds to support Canadians with cancer and honour those we love. CCS is committed to implementing physical distancing and protecting the well-being and safety of people living with cancer, event participants, our donors, volunteers, staff, and supporters.

The two-in-five Canadians expected to be diagnosed with cancer in their lifetime need your support now more than ever. That's why on Saturday, June II, we're inviting all Thunder Bay residents to join this year's Relay For Life and come together to give hope to people affected by

Green bins could reduce garbage pickups

By Ian Kaufman - TB Source

The City of Thunder Bay's plan for a green bin composting program includes reducing the frequency of garbage collection to every other week starting in 2025, city council heard on Monday.

With weekly green bin pickup, that won't be a problem, staff said, given that food and other organics make up about half of what residents throw in the trash.

Council heard a first report Monday ahead of a June 27 vote to approve the plan, intended to meet a provincial policy requiring the city to divert half of residential organic waste from landfill by 2025. The plan prepared by administration would implement weekly green bin collection for single-family homes by 2025, and for apartments and other multi-unit buildings by 2026 (the city would then evaluate adding businesses).

It would also introduce an autocart system for pickup, using standardized bins and automated "lift assist" arms, expected to bring efficiencies and reduce the physical strain on staff.

As well as cutting garbage collection to every other week, the plan would double yard waste pickup to four times per year.

The city likely can't meet the province's 50 per cent diversion target without taking those steps, staff said in a report.

The proposed changes are a "big deal" that will bring substantial benefits, said city manager Norm Gale.

"These recommended changes will transform the way we manage solid waste in our community," he said. "They will improve service levels, increasing waste reduction opportunities for residents, reducing litter, improving the health and safety of the people who work here, and creating operational savings."

The program is projected to boost the city's residential waste diversion rate from 25 to 42 per cent, and cut carbon emissions by the equivalent of 5,380 tons of CO2 a year (the city emits slightly over 1 million tons of CO2 per year).

The changes will bring new costs as well, amounting to an average of $1.5 million per year, or a $33 impact to municipal property taxes for the average household.

However, staff projected the city could make up over $800,000 of that through efficiencies from implementing the auto-cart system, which would allow it to reduce staffing from two to one employee per truck.

It could also help trim WSIB costs of around $200,000 per year for waste collection staff, administration said.

Some councillors questioned how residents would handle the reduced frequency in garbage pickup.

Coun. Brian Hamilton said even with weekly collection, some neighbourhoods still experience garbage buildup.

"In my ward, and I think right around the city, there are people who miss garbage days, there's garbage that accumulates in the laneways," he said. "I'm really hoping we can factor that in."

Staff pointed to the experience of other communities in Ontario to argue the reduction would incentivize residents to take full advantage of the green bin program – a nudge necessary to hit the provincial target.

Bees now fish out of water

U.S. court wades into categorizing bumble bees as fish

By John Shermack

The flowers were growing and the bees were happily buzzing in our garden on World Bee Day this year and those busy little insects had a reason to be pleased.

The United Nations proclaimed in 2018 that World Bee Day would be observed each year on May 20 and this year the bee world received some good news.

Decision made

A U.S. court ruling has declared that bees are now fish, in particular the Crotch bumble bee, the Franklin bumble bee, the Suckley cuckoo bumble bee and the Western bumble bee.

The California Endangered Species Act of 1970 has been interpreted to mean that bees and other threatened invertebrates are in the same category as fish and must be protected.

The act was originally meant for the protection of fish and other marine creatures but it has been updated and amended to allow for a broader interpretation.

This California court decision is a victory for environmental groups that were pushing to have these bees listed as endangered and it is also a significant win for the bees.

It is hoped that this judgement will inspire other creative approaches to provide protection for other crucial parts of our finely tuned and fragile natural environment.

Pollinating insects all over the planet are threatened by reckless human activity - global food security and sustainability is threatened by the demise in the hives of the world.

Without bees the variety and availability of fresh produce would decline drastically and human nutrition would suffer.

Every third bite of food we eat depends on pollination by bees, both those recently designated flying fish bees and the regular bumble and honey bees we see in our gardens every day.

A world without bees is easy to imagine - consider the dilemma in China where all native bees are extinct due to pesticide use, habitat loss, disease and climate change.

Renting hives to pollinate their orchards is too expensive for the average farmer but their meagre livelihood is threatened and they need to take action.

Since all the insect pollinators are gone, Chinese farmers are forced to climb their own trees and hand-pollinate their orchard tree by tree, branch by branch, one blossom at a time.

Every family member is involved in the process and it is common to on with the other.

A good human bee can pollinate 30 – 40 fruit trees in a day - if you ever wondered how it would feel to be "busy as a bee", pollinate just one tree, maybe the apple tree in vour back vard.

Bumblebees have a new status in the U.S.

Better still, get your grandparents to do it or if all else fails just or less have priority.

sit back and let the bees take care of business just like they've always done.

PERSPECTIVE 7

Even though the biodiversity of bees is adversely affected by the extinction of wild species there are still plenty of honey bees to pollinate the crops in Canadian gardens.

Trouble brewing

But we are meddling with forces of nature beyond our control and the consequences are unpredictable.

Perhaps one day we will also be precariously perched at the top of our own apple trees using a feather duster to pollinate the blossoms.

If and when that day arrives we can always look on the bright side.

Maybe we can get ourselves reclassified as insects and then we could be listed as an endangered species entitled to protection and other perks just like the bees.

For better or worse there is something fishy going on in the beehives of the world.

8 NEWS Hair cut raises charity money

By Justin Hardy - TB Source

Twelve-year-old Lachlin Smith on Sunday cut his hair for the first time in four years to donate it to Angel Hair For Kids, an organization that turns donated hair into wigs for children who experience hair loss.

At the same time, he was raising money to support the Underground Gym, a local organization that provides free access to multiple activities & meals for youth in need.

"They helped feed a lot of kids who need food and it sounded like a really good cause," said Smith. "And Peter works really hard so I figured, why not donate to him."

Smith raised over $600 through the campaign page as well as in cash for the Underground Gym and Peter Panetta, owner, says that it's a wonderful thing to see youth out in the community working to support each other.

"It's amazing because, you know what, it's the next generation and they need to be aware that we don't live in an ideal society and that there are kids in need," he said. "There are vulnerable children and if they can do something for them, that's awesome."

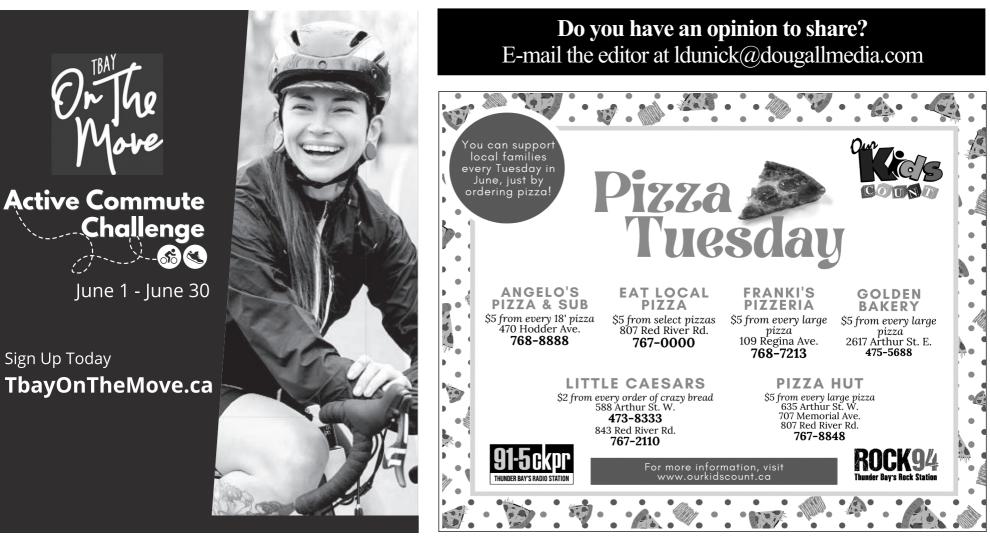

Lachlin's mother, Stacey Lafleche, says that she's very proud of her son.

"It took four years, so he's been growing his hair since he was eight, he is now 12 and it was a long haul sometimes, he didn't want to have that long hair," she said.

"And now it's gone and he did donate to a great cause. We really believe in what Peter does for the children in the community."

Lachlin Smith, 12, has been growing his hair for four years to raise money for a pair of worthy charities, including the Underground Gym.

Beefcake's grows

This column marks the 35th week of HCAYK. To date, we haven't really discussed my current day job. This June marks the third anniversary of Beefcake's Burger Factory.

If you had asked me even five years ago this is what my life would be like I really would have been shocked. Three years ago around the time of this writing I remember every little emotion going through my head. There was a lot of excitement no doubt however there were nerves. This was the first time I was swinging on my own, no net. Doubly nerve racking was the certain situation that was beyond my control my savings for Beefcakes opening had been extinguished.

June 1 came around, we were open but now, there was no rainy-day fund. I was at the mercy of Thunder Bay, I couldn't really tell anyone before we opened what was going

We didn't even have a sign. I printed 40 8.5-by-11 sheets of paper with our home-made logo on them and plastered them all over the windows.

The pressure mounted because I was inheriting a staff from the previous regime.

All of whom were owed back wages as well. These people put all their faith in Beefcakes.

They knew what we could accomplish together if we just planted our feet and pushed. June 1 was a Saturday, by 12:30, the shop was packed.

Many now mainstays and regulars of beefcakes were here. The weekend was a success, we had our ups and downs but we did what we set out to do. On Tuesday the weekend deposits hit my bank account, I Thunder Bay-built sounds catchy but for us its true, we wouldn't be anywhere without this city. Truthfully, this is the only city that would ever let me be a business

For all of Beefcake's professional accomplishments, I can honestly say I am far prouder of the different groups and causes we get to work with and help to raise awareness and funds for programs in this community. For the staff of mine that are buying vehicles and homes and paying tuitions, this is the real success I can sit back and enjoy.

With these people I have a unique issue, too many capable people and not enough work to help these amazing individuals grow beyond their current roles.

That's why as you are reading this, my team and I are preparing to open a second location for Beefcake's Burger Factory in Westfort. Heck we might even be open already.

Make sure you watch the social channels to find out what's going on with the shop, and thanks for the last three years Thunder Bay, we have no plans on going anywhere.

The sun had just risen above the trees and, as cars sped along the Trans-Canada Highway above me, I found myself secluded from the traffic, surrounded by graffiti, and busy fighting a feisty steelhead in the middle of the city on a weekday morning.

I was on my way to work, but since I live in Thunder Bay, it is not difficult to take an extra hour in the morning and catch a few fish before starting the work day. Convenience is one of the best things about urban angling.

The classic weekend fishing trip to a favourite lake has been enjoyed by anglers for generations.

Unfortunately for the modern, time-crunched sportsperson, the chance to take a full weekend or even a full day away from work and family obligations can be a rare occurrence.

However, a quick trip to some near-by water while the kids are at a Saturday birthday party or before work on a Wednesday morning may be the only opportunity to have some angling excitement between those rare weekend trips.

While fishing in an urban environment certainly doesn't have the same level of romanticism as being on a quiet and secluded lake, it can still provide the chance to escape into a small slice of nature to enjoy some angling.

Of course, the key to urban angling success is finding some productive water close to home. The simple but effective strategy when trying to locate urban fish is to look for deep and cool water.

In Thunder Bay, the shoreline of Lake

Superior is a great starting point, but our rivers will hold migratory steelhead in the spring and salmon in the fall. Perhaps more enticing, larger tributaries like the Kaministiquia River will be home to a mixed bag of different fish species throughout the year.

Along with walleye, other warm-water species like pike, perch, and bass can be found in the Kam and many other places including the shores of Lake Superior, in man-made lakes like Boulevard, and in other nearby lakes like Hazelwood

These species are present throughout the summer and are popular because they tend to be far easier to locate and catch than migratory trout and salmon.

Regardless of the species you choose to target, it is important to always check the Ontario fishing regula-on-line tions. available at www.ontario.ca, as it is the responsibility of the angler to know the limits, restrictions and exceptions for the specific water they are fishing in.

Along with seasonal restrictions, several of our urban rivers have fish sanctuaries and minimum or maximum size restrictions that an angler needs to know before wetting a line.

No matter where you live in Northwestern Ontario, there is undoubtedly some good water close to home. Whether that nearby water happens to be a lake or a river, chances are pretty decent that there are some fish in it, providing a perfect opportunity for some urban angling this summer.

Morgann De Franceschi has always loved to give back to her community.

She's volunteered at Shelter House and at Precious Bundles, helping the organization put together clothes for families in need and has even written book reviews for the Thunder Bay Public Library.

Recognized

As a result, the 14-year-old Westgate Collegiate and Vocational Institute freshman was honoured with a certificate of recognition through the Ontario Junior Citizen Awards, handed out by the Ontario Community Newspapers Association.

She's not really sure what drives her to volunteer her time.

"I just really like the saying that you've got to make the world a better place," the Thunder Bay teenager said.

"I strive for that, I guess."

Loves to give back

There's plenty of satisfaction in knowing she's helped others.

"I love giving the bundles to people and seeing how happy they are when they get them," Morgann said of her volunteer work with Precious Bundles.

The teen was one of two local certificates of recognition recipients in the latest round of awards. Thunder Bay's Grace Dunn also earned a certificate from the OCNA.

Ontario Junior Citizen Awards honour youth between ages six and 17 for exceptional and inspirational achievements.

Rating: 10 for 10

By Linda Maehans – TB Source

Or, as another popular expression goes: give this one an enthusiastic twenty-thumbs-up!

That's two (thumbs) for every finalist in the 9th annual 10 X 10: original live-theatre coming to you in short bright bursts from a big stage of talents. I say talents, plural, because under Magnus' umbrella of professionalism the 10 X 10, with the concise skill and extravaganza such as this must surely require, is in good hands. And all our creative types here in the city have many new avenues down which to glide and stride.

As Jordan Blaxill, Magnus' Theatre-in-Education director notes, it's been no easy task for the jurors. In a "blind" process they've picked the top 10 submissions, no themes or categories as guideposts. Drama; humour; suspense; existential: all on.

"That's part of 10 X 10's challenge. We put restrictions, for want of a better word, on the playwrights. Has to be ten minutes, no more, no less. It's difficult. People think big, right? They dream big when they're coming up with their idea for a play. The confines we place them under helps narrow their focus, get them to the core. What's the story you want to tell?"

Well, you'd want an engaging script, with enough oomph to snag your audience; you then leave it in the hands of unknown directors; who then audition and select only five actors for each play. The same spare number of props on stage become your set: one table and four chairs. Okay, four "blocks" are also allowed; this is where the audience (with its imagination) comes in.

"What is the situation? What are these characters trying to convey? A challenge, yes; yet out of such challenge(s) are born some of the most remarkable expressions of creativity."

Jordan's own career sounds like it's been a bit of a rethink.

"This being my first year as co-ordinator of this event, I'm getting to see the entirety of it. I've been part of 10 X 10 before, but only as one of the performers. Where you only know the play you're in, maybe get to see the other plays during rehearsals. Now, to be able to have this wonderful over-view of all the plays submitted, I get a strong sense of the level of creative ability we have here in Thunder Bay. The wonderful level of story-telling that we have here; the tales these story-tellers are able to weave – within that 10 minutes – simply outstanding."

Blaxill remarks how dynamic the 10 X 10 format is from the actors' and directors' perspective.

"It enables everyone to dive in really quickly, no need to spend time on an expansive back-story. Just get the very best from the actors straight off."

Amplified? "Absolutely. Some plays are moving; others are completely hilarious."

Take it in next Friday and Saturday at Magnus: curtain rises 7:30 p.m. with a 2 p.m. matinee on Saturday. Vote for your favourite play! There will also be an adjudicator's professional-pick for possible future development.

Icky and bizarre

David Cronenberg is back after an eight-year hiatus. From establishing himself as the king of horror with a slew of films including Rabid, Videodrome and The Fly, he balanced his extensive CV with more conventional movies including A History of Violence and Eastern Promises. More recently he's been appearing in Star Trek Discovery. He's even churned out a novel.

Crimes of the Future (SilverCity) brings Cronenberg full circle, with a bizarre evolutionary story where 'body is reality.' It's typical Cronenberg: icky, weird, grotesque, and provocative, though not horrific.

"Crimes" begins in gripping fashion, involving a boy who's discovered by his fretful mum nibbling away on a plastic wastebasket. Then something shocking occurs. Unfortunately, the promising tension dissipates.

The focus then shifts to a society where people feel no pain. For stimulus, they attend trendy underground surgeries, staged by performance artists. One marquee player is Saul (Viggo Mortensen) who's renowned for internally growing non-functioning organs extricated from his body by his partner, Caprice (Lea Seydoux.) Audiences find their performances cathartic, exciting, even erotic.

Other artists include a whirling dervish male dancer, eyes seemingly stitched shut, sporting numerous ears and a woman who defaces her face to entertain elite clientele.

"Surgery is the new sex," mutters antic Timlin (Kristen Stewart), who works alongside Wippet (Don McKellar) at the National Organ Registry. She's fascinated and turned on by Saul's act, proclaiming him as the 'Picasso of his age.' However, they have a bureaucratic concern over what becomes of Saul's organs.

Another plot line makes an environmental comment, involving Dotrice (Scott Speedman), leader of a cult subsisting on plastic. He wants to use the corpse of his murdered young son to make a statement about accelerated evolution.

Detective Cope (Welket Bungué) is investigating Dotrice, engaging Saul as his informant. Then there are two female assassins (Nadia Litz and Tanaya Beatty).who specialize in power drills.

The atmosphere bears the macabre Cronenberg stamp, thanks to set and art design melding old fashioned stylings - decrepit buildings with nutty contraptions including a bouncy exoskeleton high chair that individuals use while eating. Scalpels spring up spider-like on an operating table. Saul sleeps in a pod-like nook hooked up to wires.

One can't fault Cronenberg on his imaginative concepts, startling and captivating. However, he's less successful with a disjointed narrative that leaves plot strands dangling and characters adrift. There is no climax, no pay-off.

Cronenberg walks the walk. He recently unveiled a photograph of his kidney stones as an NFT. In interviews, he links Crimes' theme to his own reactions to recent post-cataract surgery which affected his faculties. He uses hearing aids. He sees himself as "bionically enhanced." To Cronenberg, people who have had gall bladders and hernias removed have altered their reality.

One can admire the Cronenberg aesthetic while remaining emotionally disengaged and intellectually unconvinced. For a film fixating on the body, Crimes' interesting ideas could have used some stronger connective tissue.

Two top prospects set to duel in KC a route to the Tennessee music festival I go to in non-COVID years, I started looking at which ball teams were playing at home.

I'm taking the girlfriend's 19-year-old and, even though he's not a huge baseball fan, he'll put up with going to a game or two if it means he gets to see the Suicide Boyz at Bonnaroo.

Naturally, I wanted to take him some place different, so even though Chicago and Cleveland would have been the more direct route, he's already been to all three ballparks.

I really wanted to take him to St. Louis, and as a result, I decided Earlier this year, when planning we'd go to St. Louis on Day 1 of the trip, which is also taking us to my home away from home in Charlotte, N.C.

The Royals and Orioles might not sound like a game anyone would willingly go out of their way to see, but it's a chance to check out two of the most hyped-up prospects in baseball. Kansas City boasts shortstop Bobby Witt Ir., while Baltimore recently called up catcher Adlev Rutschman.

Neither player has set the world on fire in the big leagues, but seeing them up close and personal as rookies is exciting.

hitting .224 with seven homeruns in 50 appearances. Rutschman only had seven hits in his first 51 at bats, a woeful .137, but he hit 23 in 123 games in the minors last year, so his time will come. As a catcher, he's got a lot to learn at the plate and behind it.

The next night we're heading down the I-70 to St. Louis, where I'm hoping Nolan Gorman will be in the lineup. Fans of the 2017 U-18 Baseball World Cup will remember him from the United States squad that won it all at Port Arthur Stadium.

BOBBY WITT JR. Unlike Rutschman and

Witt, a pair of higher-ranked prospects, Gorman has been phenomenal since getting the call. After last weekend's games he was hitting .304 with three homers and 11 RBI in 46 at bats, not to mention a .385 on base percentage.

It's also a chance, hopefully, to catch a final glimpse of both Albert Pujols and Joey Votto, a member of the visiting > Cincinnati Reds. I've seen both play a number of times in the past, but knowing their time in the big leagues is coming to an end, it should be a special night - and even more special if we happen to snag Nolan Arenado jerseys on the way in, the free giveaway that night.

Pujols plays almost exclusively against lefties or as a late-game pinch hitter and the Reds are offering up righty Luis Castillo. Votto has struggled this season, hitting just .185, but did hit .278 in May with a .395 OBP, so he's coming around.

Speaking of the U18 Baseball World Cup, Thunder Bay's Jack Pineau is still in the hunt for a spot on Team Canada for this year's event, scheduled for September in Sarasota, Fla.

The right-hander has been impressive in camp last Friday tossed four innings of shutout ball against players in the Philadelphis Phillies organization.

Pineau struck out six and allowed two hits and a walk.

Sounds like he's got a decent chance to make the team, though that's still a ways off at this point.

Stars host early camp

By Leith Dunick -TB Source

The Superior International Junior Hockey League season may just have come to an end, but for Rob DeGagne and the Thunder Bay North Stars, the work has just begun.

DeGagne, who recently agreed to a new three-year contract to coach the junior A team, and his staff were busy earlier this week putting a mix of prospects and veterans to the test at Fort William First Nation Arena.

The team hosted a two-day elite, inviteonly tryout camp, an attempt to mine the local hockey landscape for players who fit the North Stars mold.

DeGagne said the camp, which also included veterans like Matthew Halushak and former North Star Nikolas Campbell, was a chance for the coaching staff to evaluate players who might be interested in joining the fold and helping the team improve on its fourth-place finish in 2021-22.

"We've got our eyes on a few," DeGagne said, noting there were several Thunder Bay Kings prospects who took up the offer to take part in the camp.

Matthew Halushak took part in last week's camp.

"Obviously they're not all going to sign with us. Some will sign, some won't sign. Some will go somewhere else, some will go to the (Kam River Fighting) Walleve. That's what this is all about. We had a really good turnout and we're happy with our turnout."

It was a chance for a group of 17- and 18-year-olds to showcase their talent, though DeGagne said he had a mostly young team last season and a lot of players are slated to return in 2022-23, so their aren't a lot of spots to fill.

But DeGagne said he'll never say no to top-notch talent.

"We're looking for that bottom end, a little bit. I mean, we're always looking for a top-six guy, but we're probably not going to get it out of here, right away," he said. "Maybe a year or two from now when they get a little older they might.

"We're looking for guys who will fit in, can skate, can move, maybe some size. We're probably all looking for the same kind of hockey player. Sometimes they don't exist, you know."

DeGagne said he knows the Stars have to improve to return to form.

"We need to fill our third and fourth lines up and you know what, you can get some surprises. I'm pleasantly surprised with a few guys. So we'll see how that turns out, if we can get some of them. If we can't, we'll move on."

ISPORTSVisit tbnewswatch.com Thursday, June 9, 2022 Chill can't stop visiting Menace

By Leith Dunick – TB Source

The Des Moines Menace are the defending USL 2 champions for a reason – they're pretty good.

Making their first trip north of the border in almost three years, the Menace got off to a quick start on Friday night at Chapples Park, withstood a first-half surge by the Thunder Bay Chill, then dominated the second half and cruised to a 3-0 triumph.

Ryan Kingsford scored twice for the Menace, beating Chill keeper Eduardo D'Avino in the 11th minute on a high, hard shot, then once again in the 56th, out-faking the Thunder Bay netminder and slamming it home.

Fernando Garcia put it away with a goal in the 84th on pass from Ryley Kraft.

The fast start was key, Kingsford said.

"We knew it was going to be a good game and we had to come out fast and strong," said Kingsford, a native of Herne Bay, England who also plays soccer at the University of Akron.

"We did that. We did struggle a little bit, we were pinned in, but we dealt with it."

Getting that second goal changed the nature of the game, Kingsford added.

"I think it was really key. It took their confidence down a little bit. I've always been told when you score, it takes 20 per cent off the team that you're attacking. When we scored it took another 20 per cent off them and gave us a 10 per cent boost."

It also convinced Chill coach Gio Petraglia to change his formation, a move that didn't work out as planned.

Instead of Thunder Bay controlling the ball as they did for the final 25 minutes of the opening half, the Menace owned the ball, able to repel a desperate Chill team seeking to find any glimmer of offence against a team that's only given up four goals in four games, all wins.

"That's the only reason I believe we fell apart in the second half," Petraglia said. "The second half was totally on me. The first half, these boys played the game I was asking them to play and that's where we're going to start from."

Thunder Bay's best chance in the opening half came in the 35th, when Sebastian Bocaz Canales took a crossing pass from Eduardo Righetti and fired it off the crossbar, missing a chance to tie the game before the break by a matter of inches.

"I wanted to play it off the first post, but it bounced first so I didn't shoot it how I wanted. If it was one or two centimeters down, but it hit the crossbar and that's unlucky," said Bocaz Canales, a native of Chile.

Four minutes later the Chill's chances for a goal suffered a big blow, when Righetti went down with a knee injury and was forced to leave the game, depriving the home team of one of its top threats.

Down 3-0, Thunder Bay's best chance to score on the night came in the 88th.

Andrea De Vincenzi, who entered for Righetti, fired a point-blank shot that Menace keeper Victor Makela stopped. The rebound came out to Bocaz Canales, who pounded it the goal line, only to have a Des Moines defender stop it short.

The Chill host Peoria City on Friday at 7 p.m.

The Chill's Osita Obiekwe goes up against Des Moines' Morris Duggan last Friday.
